Canada imposes sanctions, which may include exchange restrictions and restrictions on payments and transfers for current international transactions, for the preservation of national or international security against the following: (1) under the SEMA: the Islamic Republic of Iran, the DPRK, Myanmar, Nicaragua (effective June 21, 2019), Russia, South Sudan, Syria, Ukraine, Venezuela, and Zimbabwe; (2) under the UN Act, to implement UNSC decisions, pursuant to Articles 25 and 103 of the Charter of the UN, with respect to Al-Qaeda and the Taliban, the Central African Republic, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Eritrea, Iran, Iraq, DPRK, Lebanon, Libya, Mali (effective October 10, 2018), Somalia, Sudan, and Yemen. Sanctions under the UN Act also affect certain individuals and entities in connection with terrorist activities under the Regulations Implementing the UN Resolutions on the Suppression of Terrorism; and (3) Effective June 20, 2018, the Justice for Victims of Corrupt Foreign Officials Act (Sergei Magnitsky Law) (S.C. 2017, c. 21) was established and authorizes the government to place controls on the movement of currency to individuals suspected of contributing to acts of significant corruption and/or gross human rights violations. Foreign nationals from Myanmar, Russia, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, and Venezuela are currently listed pursuant to this Act. Canada may also implement exchange restrictions and restrictions on payments and transfers for current international transactions under other mechanisms, including the Criminal Officials Act, against specific individuals, groups, and entities but not against entire jurisdictions or economic sectors in Tunisia and Ukraine. Sanctions against Côte d’Ivoire and Liberia have been repealed. Effective November 29, 2018, the Regulations Amending the Justice for Victims of Corrupt Foreign Officials Regulations (SOR/2018-259) were adopted. These amended the Justice for Victims of Corrupt Foreign Officials Regulations (SOR/2017-233) to include 17 foreign nationals from Saudi Arabia, who, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, are responsible for or complicit in gross violations of internationally recognized human rights, particularly the torture and extrajudicial killing of Saudi journalist Jamal Khashoggi. These individuals were listed pursuant to the Justice for Victims of Corrupt Foreign Officials Act (S.C. 2017, c. 21). Floating

Yes. The de jure exchange rate arrangement is free floating, with the exchange rate of the Canadian dollar determined by supply and demand. However, under an intervention policy established by the government in close consultation with the Bank of Canada (BOC), the BOC may intervene in the foreign exchange market on behalf of the government. The current policy is to intervene on a discretionary, rather than systematic, basis and only in exceptional circumstances. The last time the BOC intervened was as part of the concerted intervention with authorities in Europe, Japan, the United Kingdom, and the United States to counter an excessively strong yen following the March 2011 earthquake in Japan. Previously, the BOC intervened in September 1998 to influence movements in the Canadian dollar. Interventions are announced on the BOC’s website, and the amount of intervention is published in the government’s monthly official press release on international reserves. The amount of any BOC intervention in foreign currency markets is published in the monthly release of the government’s official international reserves. This release is generally published three business days after month end.

Official exchange rate

Yes. The BOC publishes on its website the exchange rate for 26 currencies vis-à-vis the Canadian dollar. The foreign exchange rates are published once a day, at 16:30 ET (Eastern Time), in the form of a single indicative rate for each currency pair that is based on an average of rates observed during the business day. They may differ from the rates of financial institutions and other market sources. The BOC exchange rates are released for informational purposes only and are not intended to be used as the benchmark rate for executing foreign exchange trades. The BOC does not guarantee the accuracy or completeness of these rates.

Government and Central Bank | Yes. | The inflation target is set jointly by the BOC and the federal government. The BOC and the government have renewed the inflation-control target framework six times since its adoption in 1991—most recently in October 2016 for five years to the end of 2021. The target aims to keep the total consumer price index (CPI) inflation at the 2% midpoint of a medium-term target range of 1%–3%. The BOC raises or lowers its policy interest rate to achieve the target, typically within six to eight quarters—the time usually needed for policy action to work its way through the economy and have its full effect on inflation. Decisions are made on a consensus basis.

Inflation target | Yes.

Target with tolerance band | Yes. | The inflation target is the 2% midpoint of a medium-term target range of 1%–3%.

Band/Range

Target measure | Yes.

CPI | Yes. | The inflation target is expressed as the year-over-year (y-o-y) increase in the total CPI. The bank also monitors a set of “core” inflation measures. The BOC’s preferred core inflation measures are CPI-trim, CPI-median, and CPI-common. CPI-trim (trimmed mean): a measure of core inflation that excludes CPI components whose rates of change in a given month are located in the tails of the distribution of price changes. CPI-median (weighted median): a measure of core inflation corresponding to the price change located at the 50th percentile (in terms of CPI basket weights) of the distribution of price changes in a given month. CPI-common (common component): a measure of core inflation that tracks common price changes across categories in the CPI basket. CPI is published by Statistics Canada.

Core inflation

Target horizon Yes. BOC’s target horizon is six to eight quarters.

Operating target (policy rate) Yes.

Policy rate Yes. The BOC raises or lowers its policy interest rate (overnight rate) to achieve the inflation target, typically within six to eight quarters—the time usually needed for policy action to work its way through the economy and have its full effect on inflation.

Target corridor band Yes. The target corridor band ranges from a low value of 0.25% to a high value of 2.75%. The BOC operates a system to make sure that trading in the overnight market stays within an “operating band.” This band is one-half of a percentage point wide and has the Target for the Overnight Rate at its center. For example, if the operating band is 2.25 to 2.75%, the Target for the Overnight Rate would be 2.50%. The top of that band (2.75%) is the Bank Rate—the interest rate that the Bank charges on one-day loans to Large Value Transfer System. The bottom of the band (2.25%) is the deposit rate—the interest rate that the Bank pays on any surplus funds that participating institutions leave on deposit at the Bank overnight.

Import permits are required (under various laws) for a broad range of items, including certain endangered species of flora and fauna, natural gas, material and equipment for the production or use of nuclear energy, and certain internationally controlled drugs. Under Canada’s Export and Import Permits Act, import permits are also required for products that are included on the Import Control List, including certain small arms, large-caliber armaments or weapons, military products, chemicals and a number of other textiles and apparel, agricultural, and metal products. In addition, Health Canada does not permit the importation of unregistered drugs. Imports of used motor vehicles (less than 15 years old) are generally prohibited for reasons of safety and environmental standards. Exceptions are generally available for vehicles imported from the United States and Mexico. Some regulations listed in Section II.B.1 above include import restrictions. Imports prohibited under UN Act regulations require a certificate from the Minister of Foreign Affairs and, if required by the regulation in question, approval from the UNSC. Imports prohibited under SEMA regulations require a permit from the Minister of Foreign Affairs under the related Permit Authorization Order. Effective January 1, 2019, the exemptions for used vehicles originating from Mexico (which began to be phased in on January 1, 2009) were entirely phased in.

Measures consistent with international trade obligations are in effect. Measures are imposed, taking into consideration competition policy factors and other economic costs, as appropriate.

On average, import tariff rates are low. Canada’s trade-weighted average tariff rate for all products, including agricultural products, has been less than 1% since 1998, largely as a result of duty-free access under the 1988 Canada-US Free Trade Agreement. Canada is an active participant in bilateral and regional free trade negotiations and currently has agreements with Mexico and the United States (under NAFTA, anticipated to be replaced by the modernized Canada-US-Mexico Agreement (CUSMA)), Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, the EFTA countries, the EU, Honduras, Israel, Jordan, Korea, Panama, Peru, and Ukraine. In addition, the Comprehensive and Progressive Agreement for Trans-Pacific Partnership (CPTPP) entered into force between Canada and the six other countries in the Asia-Pacific region to have ratified the agreement: Australia, Japan, Mexico, New Zealand, Singapore, and Vietnam. Canada is also engaged in ongoing negotiations with the MERCOSUR bloc (Argentina, Brazil, Paraguay, and Uruguay), and the Pacific Alliance. Canada has also been engaged in exploratory discussions with the ASEAN toward a potential free trade agreement (FTA). Canada maintains three preferential tariff treatments for developing economies: the General Preferential Tariff, the Least Developed Country Tariff, and the Commonwealth Caribbean Countries Tariff. Canada also continues to reduce tariffs on a unilateral basis. Since 2009, Canada has eliminated more than 2,470 tariffs, including on both imported machinery and equipment and manufacturing inputs (making Canada a tariff-free zone for industrial manufacturers) and a broad range of goods used as agri-food processing ingredients. The highest tariff rates apply to a limited number of over-quota, supply-managed agricultural products (dairy products, poultry, eggs). Canada’s other sectors with higher-than-average tariffs include textiles and apparel, footwear, and ships.

The Export Control List identifies goods and technologies controlled under the Export and Import Permits Act. This list includes all items identified in the various international export control regimes in which Canada participates. In addition, certain items are controlled to ensure the orderly export marketing of certain products subject to import limitations by other countries, to implement bilateral agreements, to ensure adequate supply and distribution, and for nonproliferation purposes (that is, chemical, biological, and nuclear weapons and their delivery systems). The Area Control List includes countries to which the exports of all items are controlled. At present, only North Korea is on this list. Permits are required for the exportation of controlled goods and technologies to all countries except, in most cases, the United States, as well as for the export of all items destined for countries on the Area Control List. Acts and Regulations listed in Section II.B.1 above contain export restrictions, excluding the Freezing Assets of Corrupt Foreign Officials Act. Exports prohibited under UN Act regulations require a certificate from the Minister of Foreign Affairs and, if required by the...

Certain items are controlled to ensure orderly export marketing of products subject to import limits by other countries and to implement bilateral and free trade agreements and/or ensure adequate supply and distribution. Canada administers export quotas and issues export permits or certificates for textiles and apparel goods exported under NAFTA, for high sugar and sugar-containing products, processed food, dog and cat food, and vehicles exported under Comprehensive Economic and Trade Agreement, and for peanut butter, sugar, and sugar-containing products exported to the United States.

The Special Economic Measures (Ukraine) Regulations (SOR/2014-60) prohibit persons in Canada and Canadians abroad from making an investment in the Crimea region of Ukraine that involves a dealing in any property located in the Crimea region of Ukraine that is held by or on behalf of the Crimea region of Ukraine or a person in the Crimea region of Ukraine. SOR/2014-60 was amended June 29, 2015, to prohibit persons in Canada and Canadians abroad from making an investment in the Crimea region of Ukraine that involves a dealing in any property located in the Crimea region of Ukraine. The Minister of Foreign Affairs may exempt any prohibited action by the issuance of a permit under the Special Economic Measures (Ukraine) Permit Authorization Order. In addition to the limitations on debt and equity financing, the Special Economic Measures (Russia) Regulations (SOR/2014-58) place limitations on the provision of financial services associated with property and oil exploration. The Special Economic Measures (Iran) Regulations (SOR/2010 165) were amended February 5, 2016. Persons in Canada and Canadians abroad are prohibited from dealing in property, entering into transactions, or providing financial or related services to persons listed in Schedule 1 of the Regulations or to a person acting for the benefit of a listed person. The broad prohibition against financial services was lifted following the February 5, 2016, amendments. The Minister of Foreign Affairs may exempt any prohibited action by the issuance of a permit under the Special Economic Measures (Iran) Permit Authorization Order. The Special Economic Measures (Syria) Regulations (SOR/2011-114) prohibit persons in Canada and Canadians abroad from investing in Syria if the investment involves property, wherever located, held by or on behalf of Syria, a person in Syria, or a Syrian who does not ordinarily reside in Canada. Persons in Canada and Canadians abroad are also prohibited from providing or acquiring financial or other related services to, from, or for the benefit of or at the direction or order of Syria or any person in Syria for the purpose of such an investment. The Minister of Foreign Affairs may exempt any prohibited action by the issuance of a permit under the Special Economic Measures (Syria) Permit Authorization Order. The Special Economic Measures (DPRK) Regulations (SOR/2011-167) prohibit persons in Canada and Canadians abroad from investing in any entity in the DPRK that involves dealing in property, wherever located, held by or on behalf of the DPRK, any person in the DPRK, or a DPRK national who does not ordinarily reside in Canada. The regulations also prohibit the provision or acquisition of financial services—including those that are intended to facilitate an investment in any entity—to, from, or for the benefit of or at the direction or order of the DPRK or persons in the DPRK. Provision of such financial services requires a permit from the Minister of Foreign Affairs under the Special Economic Measures (DPRK) Permit Authorization Order.

Inward direct investment
Yes.

There are controls on direct investment by nonresidents in (1) activities related to Canada’s cultural heritage and national identity, in particular (a) publication, distribution, and sale of books, magazines, periodicals, and newspapers in print or machine readable form, but not including solely printing or typesetting any of the above; (b) production, distribution, sale, and exhibition of film and video recordings; (c) production, distribution, sale, and exhibition of audio and video music recordings; (d) publication, distribution, and sale of music in print or machine readable form; and (e) radio communication intended for direct reception by the general public; radio, television, and cable broadcasting companies; and satellite programming and broadcast network services; (2) air transport—foreign ownership of Canadian common carriers is limited to 49% and no more than 25% of the voting interests can be owned directly or indirectly by any single non-Canadian and no more than 25% of the voting interests can be owned by one or more non-Canadians authorized to provide air services in any jurisdiction, and only Canadians (as defined in the Canada Transportation Act) may register an aircraft as Canadian and obtain an operator certificate for the following commercial air services: (a) domestic air services; (b) scheduled international air services reserved for Canadian carriers under air services agreements; (c) nonscheduled international air services reserved for Canadian carriers under the Canada Transportation Act; and (d) specialty air services; (3) maritime transport; (4) telecommunications—foreign investment in a facilities-based telecommunications service supplier is restricted to 20% direct investment and 33.3% indirect investment. Restrictions do not apply to satellite and sub-sea facilities and do not apply to providers with less than a 10% revenue share of the telecommunications market; (5) uranium—51% minimum Canadian ownership requirement in individual uranium mining properties at the first stage of production unless the project is controlled by Canadian nationals, as defined in the ICA; the Cabinet may grant exemptions if Canadian partners cannot be found; and (6) fish harvesting. Under the ICA, acquisitions of large Canadian businesses by non-Canadian investors are subject to net benefit review. The thresholds for direct acquisitions of control by WTO members and trade agreement partners are adjusted annually by a formula to reflect changes in nominal gross domestic product. The new thresholds become effective on January first of each year. The review threshold for non-WTO members is currently Can$5 million for direct acquisitions and Can$50 million for indirect acquisitions. For all non-Canadian investors, acquisitions of Canadian cultural businesses are also reviewable at these thresholds (that is, Can$5 million and Can$50 million), except for (1) (e) of the paragraph above, for which non-cultural business thresholds apply. For investors from WTO member countries, the review threshold for direct acquisitions of control of non-cultural Canadian businesses is Can$1.045 billion in enterprise value (previously Can$1 billion), effective January 1, 2019. Under current legislation, the threshold for WTO investors is adjusted annually according to a formula based on growth in nominal gross domestic product, effective January 1, 2019. With the coming into force of the Canada-European Union Comprehensive Economic and Trade Agreement, the review threshold is Can$1.568 billion in enterprise value for EU investors as of January 1, 2019, as well as for investors from other trade agreement partners (Chile, Colombia, Honduras, Mexico, Panama, Peru, South Korea, and the United States). When the CPTPP came into force, Australia, Brunei, Japan, Malaysia, New Zealand, Singapore, and Vietnam also received the Can$1.568 billion threshold. Indirect acquisitions of control of non-cultural Canadian businesses by WTO investors are not reviewable for net benefit. Effective January 1, 2019, acquisitions of control of non-cultural Canadian businesses by WTO state-owned enterprise (SOE) investors are reviewable for likely net benefit at Can$416 million in asset value, up from effective January 1, 2018, Can$398 million (previously Can$379 million in 2017). Under the guidelines issued by the Minister of Innovation, Science and Economic Development on the acquisition of control of major investments in Canada by SOEs, the governance and commercial orientation of SOEs are examined as part of the net benefit review of those investments. In addition, in December 2012, the government issued a policy that SOE applications for the control of a Canadian oil-sands business will be approved only in an “exceptional circumstance.” An SOE includes entities influenced directly or indirectly by a foreign government. A direct acquisition occurs when a non-Canadian directly acquires a Canadian business. An indirect acquisition occurs when a non-Canadian acquires a business outside Canada and that business has a subsidiary in Canada. Decisions to allow an investment are based on “likely net benefit” to Canada. The net benefit factors are set out in Section 20 of the ICA. Decisions regarding non-cultural industries are made by the Minister of Innovation, Science and Economic Development. The Minister of Canadian Heritage makes the decision on investments related to cultural businesses. A list of cultural businesses is given in Schedule IV of the Investment Canada Regulations. Ministers have 45 days to make a decision on a reviewable investment. The review period may be extended by 30 days, and beyond only with the agreement of the Minister and the investor. Investments by non-Canadians in the cultural sector (below threshold value acquisitions and establishments of new Canadian businesses) that are only subject to a notification under the Act may be subject to a review if the Governor General in Council orders it, based on the belief that it is in the public interest to do so and the investment is related to Canada’s national identity and cultural heritage. The Regulations implementing the UN Resolutions on Iran (SOR/2007-44) were amended February 5, 2016. The UN Resolutions on Iran prohibit financial or related services or the facilitation of any transaction related to uranium mining in Canada, or to the production or the use of nuclear materials and technologies listed in Information Circular INFCIRC/254/Rev. Foreign investments of any size are reviewable for national security. Effective December 30, 2018, the CPTPP entered into force with Australia, Japan, Mexico, New Zealand, and Singapore, giving private investors from these countries of ultimate control access to the trade agreement review threshold. Effective January 14, 2019, the CPTPP entered into force for Vietnam, giving private investors from this country of ultimate control, access to the trade agreement review threshold.

Ontario has a 15% nonresident speculation tax (NRST) on the purchase or acquisition of an interest in residential property located... in the Greater Golden Horseshoe (GGH) by individuals who are not citizens or permanent residents of Canada or by foreign corporations (“foreign entities”) and taxable trustees. The NRST applies to the transfer of land which contains at least one and not more than six single family residences. Examples of land containing one single family residence include land containing a detached house, a semi-detached house, a town house or a condominium unit. In a situation involving the purchase of multiple condominium units, each unit would be considered land containing one single family residence.

Examples of land containing more than one single family residence that are subject to the tax include land containing duplexes, triplexes, fourplexes, fiveplexes, and sixplexes. The NRST does not apply to other types of land such as land containing multi-residential rental apartment buildings with more than six units, agricultural land, commercial land, or industrial land. The NRST applies on the value of the consideration for the residential property. If the land transferred includes both residential property and another type of property, the NRST applies on the portion of the value of the consideration attributable to the residential property. For example, if the purchase price of the transaction is $1,000,000 and contains one single family residence with a value of the consideration of $400,000, and commercial land with a value of the consideration of $600,000, the 15% NRST would apply to only the $400,000 portion.

Since 2016, an additional 15% property transfer tax was introduced on foreign entities or taxable trustees on transfers of residential property located in the Greater Vancouver Regional District. The tax applies in relation to purchases or gaining interest in a property. Effective February 21, 2018, the additional property tax rate on foreign entities or taxable trustees on transfers of residential property located in the Greater Vancouver Regional District was increased from 15% to 20%.

There are no limits on investments abroad. Banks may make investments abroad in financial sector entities, subject to the prudent person test, and are required in some instances to obtain approval. No controls are placed on the ownership of banks that specifically preclude nonresident ownership. The shares of large banks must remain widely held, and fit and proper investors may own up to 20% of voting shares and 30% of any class of nonvoting shares, provided no single shareholder or group of shareholders controls the bank. Medium banks may have individual shareholdings of up to 65% with a public offering of at least 35% of the voting shares. Small banks may be 100% closely held. Residents and nonresidents may set up or acquire a smaller bank, subject to ministerial approval.

Changes during 2018 and 2019
Exchange Measures

The Justice for Victims of Corrupt Foreign Officials Act (Sergei Magnitsky Law) (S.C. 2017, c. 21) was established and authorizes the government to place controls on the movement of currency to individuals suspected of contributing to acts of significant corruption and/or gross human rights violations. Foreign nationals from Myanmar, Russia, Saudi Arabia, Sudan, and Venezuela are currently listed pursuant to this Act.

Canada imposed sanctions on Mali.

The Regulations Amending the Justice for Victims of Corrupt Foreign Officials Regulations (SOR/2018-259) were adopted. These amended the Justice for Victims of Corrupt Foreign Officials Regulations (SOR/2017-233) to include 17 foreign nationals from Saudi Arabia, who, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, are responsible for or complicit in gross violations of internationally recognized human rights, particularly the torture and extrajudicial killing of Saudi journalist Jamal Khashoggi. These individuals were listed pursuant to the Justice for Victims of Corrupt Foreign Officials Act (S.C. 2017, c. 21).

Canada imposed sanctions on Nicaragua under the Special Economic Measures Act.

Imports and Import Payments

The exemptions for used vehicles originating from Mexico (which began to be phased in on January 1, 2009) were entirely phased in.

Capital Transactions

Acquisitions of control of non-cultural Canadian businesses by WTO state-owned enterprise (SOE) investors are reviewable for likely net benefit at Can$398 million in asset value, up from Can$379 million in 2017.

Changes were made to limits on FDI in air transport sector—foreign ownership of Canadian common carriers is now limited to 49% (previously 25%) and new limits were introduced on voting ownership and control, such that no more than 25% of the voting interests can be owned directly or indirectly by any single non-Canadian and no more than 25% of the voting interests can be owned by one or more non-Canadians authorized to provide air services in any jurisdiction.

The Comprehensive and Progressive Agreement for Trans-Pacific Partnership entered into force with Australia, Japan, Mexico, New Zealand, and Singapore, giving private investors from these countries of ultimate control access to the trade agreement review threshold.

With the coming into force of the Canada-European Union Comprehensive Economic and Trade Agreement, the review threshold is Can$1.568 billion in enterprise value for EU investors. The limits for other trade agreement investors (Chile, Colombia, Honduras, Mexico, Panama, Peru, South Korea, and the United States) were also increased to Can$1.568 billion from Can$1.5 billion.
For investors from WTO member countries, the review threshold for direct acquisitions of control of non-cultural Canadian businesses is Can$1.045 billion in enterprise value (up from Can$1 billion). Under current legislation, the threshold for WTO investors is adjusted annually according to a formula based on growth in nominal gross domestic product.

Acquisitions of control of non-cultural Canadian businesses by WTO state-owned enterprise investors are reviewable for likely net benefit at Can$416 million in asset value, up from Can$398 million in 2018.

The Comprehensive and Progressive Agreement for Trans-Pacific Partnership entered into force for Vietnam, giving private investors from this country of ultimate control, access to the trade agreement review threshold.

The additional property tax rate on foreign entities or taxable trustees on transfers of residential property located in the Greater Vancouver Regional District was increased from 15% to 20%.

<th>The exchange rate arrangement of the Central African Monetary Union is a conventional peg. The CAR participates in the Central African Monetary Union and has no separate legal tender. The Monetary Cooperation Agreement (MCA) between CEMAC member countries and France is based on three principles: (1) a common CB; (2) fixed parity with the euro; and (3) an unlimited convertibility guarantee. Article 16 empowers the finance ministers of signatory countries (“Joint Monetary Committee”) to amend the MCA. Article 17 permits signatories to renounce the agreement. Official exchange rate  Yes.  The CFA franc is officially pegged to the euro, the intervention currency, at a fixed rate of CFAF 655.957 per euro. The exchange rate is fixed by Article 12 of the MCA of November 23, 1972, between the BEAC and France, which states that the par value may be modified following consultation among the signatory countries (BEAC members and France), taking into account the demands of the economic and financial situation of the member countries. Exchange transactions in euros between the BEAC and commercial banks are made at this rate. Buying and selling rates for certain other foreign currencies are also listed officially based on the fixed rate for the euro and the rates for these foreign currencies prevailing in the Paris foreign exchange market. The official rate is used for accounting and valuation.

Arrangements for Payments and Receipts

Prescription of currency requirements Yes.

Controls on the use of domestic currency No.

Within the CEMAC, the CFA franc is used freely for payments and receipts relating to current and capital transactions and payments. Settlements with all countries other than CEMAC members must be made through correspondent banks in one of the currencies of the two parties or in any other currency agreed on by the two parties to the transaction.

For current transactions and payments No.

For capital transactions No.

Transactions in capital and money market instruments No.

Transactions in derivatives and other instruments No.

Credit operations No.

Use of foreign exchange among residents Yes.

The monetary unit is the CFA franc, which is the sole official currency and legal tender in all CEMAC member countries. Consequently, transactions among residents must be settled in domestic currency.

Payments arrangements Yes.
Bilateral payments arrangements

Operative No.

Inoperative No.

Regional arrangements Yes. An operations account links all the countries with the French Treasury. All purchases and sales of foreign currencies and euros in exchange for CFA francs are ultimately settled by a debit or credit to the operations account. Governments may maintain foreign currency deposits related to oil reserves at commercial banks and use them to meet their external debt service obligations. Exchange regulations in the CEMAC member countries are harmonized.

Clearing agreements No.

Barter agreements and open accounts Yes.

Administration of control Yes. Administration of the foreign exchange regulations is the responsibility of the MOFs of the CEMAC countries, which may delegate all or a portion of their authority to the BEAC, the COBAC, and licensed intermediaries. For example, authority is delegated to licensed intermediaries to carry out transactions with the rest of the world. They must verify the validity of transactions, collect statistics, and report these activities to the monetary authorities. However, certain types of transactions may not be delegated. The BEAC supervises the exchange regulations; evaluates foreign exchange hedging operations; reviews requests for approval of opening of foreign exchange accounts by some resident legal entities; and monitors the repatriation of export proceeds. The COBAC ensures that licensed intermediaries comply with certain provisions of these regulations, especially to prevent weakening of the CEMAC banking system.

Payments arrears No. Licensed intermediaries may freely execute their customers’ payment orders. The related transfers may, at their request, be made through the BEAC. In this context, the MCA with France serves to guarantee the convertibility of the CFA franc. No payment arrears are allowed on the grounds that insufficient foreign exchange is available.

Private No.

Controls on trade in gold (coins and/or bullion) Yes. CEMAC residents are free to hold, purchase, and sell gold in any form within the CEMAC.

On domestic ownership and/or trade Yes. Except in the case of manufactured articles containing small quantities of gold, CEMAC gold imports and exports are subject to approval by the appropriate authorities. The national treasuries and the BEAC are exempt from this requirement.

Controls on exports and imports of banknotes Yes. Residents and nonresidents traveling from one country to another within the CEMAC may take with them an unlimited amount of CEMAC banknotes and coins.

On exports Yes. CFA francs issued by the BEAC may not be exported to countries outside the CEMAC. However, departing resident travelers may have in their possession up to CFAF 100,000. During their trips outside the CEMAC, travelers must use payment instruments other than BEAC banknotes (foreign currency, traveler’s checks, bank drafts, transfers, etc.).

The exchange rate arrangement of the Central African Monetary Union (CAMU) is a conventional peg. Chad participates in the CAMU and has no separate legal tender. The Monetary Cooperation Agreement (MCA) between CAMU member countries and France is based on three principles: (1) a common CB; (2) fixed parity with the euro; and (3) an unlimited convertibility guarantee. Article 16 empowers the finance ministers of signatory countries (Joint Monetary Committee) to amend the MCA. Article 17 permits signatories to amend the agreement. Article 18 specifies that the expulsion of a member country from the BEAC automatically results in that country’s renunciation of the MCA.

Official exchange rate Yes. The CFA franc is officially pegged to the euro, the intervention currency, at a fixed rate of CFAF 655.957 per euro. The exchange rate is fixed by Article 12 of the MCA of November 23, 1972, between the BEAC and France, which states that the par value may be modified following consultation among the signatory countries (BEAC members and France), taking into account the demands of the economic and financial situation of the member countries. Exchange transactions in euros between the BEAC and commercial banks are made at this rate. Buying and selling rates for certain other foreign currencies are also listed officially based on the fixed rate for the euro and the rates for these foreign currencies prevailing in the Paris foreign exchange market. The official rate is used for accounting and valuation.

Licensing of exchange bureaus is the responsibility of the MOFs of the CEMAC member countries. Their operations are limited to OTC transactions. Licensed intermediaries, who set their own exchange rates with their customers for currencies other than the euro, may freely conduct foreign exchange transactions with their customers. The BEAC’s OTC foreign exchange transactions are conducted exclusively with national public accountants and treasuries. Commercial banks may also acquire euro notes at 1.5% from the CB. There are eight authorized foreign exchange bureaus in Chad.

Within the limits of available stocks, the BEAC’s OTC exchange transactions are conducted exclusively with national public accounts and treasuries. Commercial banks may also acquire euro notes at 1.5% from the CB.
There are no restrictions on interbank foreign exchange transactions within the CEMAC. Exchange transactions are OTC transactions. The BEAC does not intervene in exchange transactions within the CEMAC. These transactions are freely conducted by operators licensed by the MOF with the approval of the Central African Banking Commission (COBAC). A fee of no more than 4% for CFA franc area notes and 10% for other currencies, not including the TCA and any other specific tax, is collected by licensed intermediaries on transactions in foreign banknotes and traveler’s checks. This fee covers all charges on OTC transactions and the intermediation margin. All banks approved by COBAC and authorized by the Monetary Authority to operate in the country are automatically eligible to participate in the interbank market. Only participation in BEAC intervention requires the approval of the governor after COBAC’s consent. There are eight authorized banks, all of which participate in the interbank market.

Foreign exchange transactions are conducted on an OTC basis. Licensed intermediaries may enter into forward exchange contracts up to a limit of CFAF 100 million on presentation of supporting documentation (invoices, debt repayment schedules, or other foreign-currency-denominated debt instruments) and must report such activities to the BEAC. For amounts over CFAF 100 million, requests for forward exchange contracts must be made to the BEAC so that their purpose may be verified.

Arrangements for Payments and Receipts

Within the CEMAC, the CFA franc is used freely for payments and receipts relating to current and capital transactions and payments. Settlements with all countries other than CEMAC members must be made through correspondent banks in one of the currencies of the two parties or in any other currency agreed on by the two parties to the transaction.
Use of foreign exchange among residents: Yes.

The monetary unit is the CFA franc, which is the sole official currency and legal tender in all CEMAC member countries. Consequently, transactions among residents must be settled in domestic currency.

Payments arrangements: Yes.

Bilateral payments arrangements: No.

Operative: No.

Inoperative: No.

Regional arrangements: Yes.

An operations account links all the countries with the French Treasury. All purchases and sales of foreign currencies and euros in exchange for CFA francs are ultimately settled by a debit or credit to the operations account. Governments may maintain foreign currency deposits related to oil reserves at commercial banks and use them to meet their external debt service obligations. Exchange regulations in the CEMAC member countries are harmonized.

Clearing agreements: No.

Barter agreements and open accounts: Yes.

Administration of control: Yes.

Administration of the foreign exchange regulations is the responsibility of the MOFs of the CEMAC countries, which may delegate all or a portion of their authority to the BEAC, the COBAC, and licensed intermediaries. For example, authority is delegated to licensed intermediaries to carry out transactions with the rest of the world. They must verify the validity of transactions, collect statistics, and report these activities to the monetary authorities. However, certain types of transactions may not be delegated. The BEAC supervises the exchange regulations; evaluates foreign exchange hedging operations; reviews requests for approval of foreign exchange accounts by some resident legal entities; and monitors the repatriation of export proceeds. The COBAC ensures that licensed intermediaries comply with certain provisions of these regulations, especially to prevent weakening of the CEMAC banking system.

Payments arrears: No.

Licensed intermediaries may freely execute their customers’ payment orders. The related transfers may, at their request, be made through the BEAC. In this context, the MCA with France serves to guarantee the convertibility of the CFA franc. No payment arrears are allowed on the grounds that insufficient foreign exchange is available.

Official: No.

Private: No.

Controls on trade in gold (coins and/or bullion): Yes.

CEMAC residents are free to hold, purchase, and sell gold in any form within the CEMAC.

On domestic ownership and/or trade: No.

On external trade: Yes.

Except in the case of manufactured articles containing small quantities of gold, CEMAC gold imports and exports are subject to approval by the appropriate authorities. The national treasuries and the BEAC are exempt from this requirement.

Controls on exports and imports of banknotes: Yes.

Residents and nonresidents traveling from one country to another within the CEMAC may take with them an unlimited amount of CEMAC banknotes and coins.

On exports: Yes.
Domestic currency

Yes. CFA francs issued by the BEAC may not be exported to countries outside the CEMAC. However, departing resident travelers may have in their possession up to CFAF 100,000. During their trips outside the CEMAC, travelers must use payment instruments other than BEAC banknotes (foreign currency, traveler’s checks, bank drafts, transfers, etc.).

Foreign currency

Yes. Resident and nonresident travelers crossing CEMAC borders must, on exit, declare any foreign currency, securities, or instruments valued at more than CFAF 1 million to the customs authorities. Nonresident travelers leaving the CEMAC may take with them foreign currency valued at up to the amount they declared on entering the CEMAC. If they made no declaration on entry or if they are carrying sums exceeding those they brought into the CEMAC, they must explain the source of the amount in excess of CFAF 1 million. Supporting documents include pay slips and work permits (wage income), student cards (parental assistance for students and trainees), and notarized instruments (donations), among others.

On imports

Yes. CFA francs issued by the BEAC may not be imported from countries outside the CEMAC. However, arriving resident travelers may have in their possession up to CFAF 100,000.

Foreign currency

No. Resident and nonresident travelers crossing CEMAC borders must, on entry, declare foreign currency, securities, and instruments valued at more than CFAF 1 million to the customs authorities.

Resident Accounts

- Foreign exchange accounts permitted: Yes.
- Held domestically: Yes. Residents may not open foreign exchange accounts in local banks.
- Approval required: Yes. The MOF may allow certain resident legal entities to open foreign exchange accounts with BEAC consent. These accounts may not be credited with CFA francs or with debits from CFA franc accounts.
- Held abroad: No. The principle underlying the CAMU is the centralization of reserves at the BEAC. Consequently, foreign currency acquired by residents in transactions with the rest of the world must be systematically repatriated and surrendered to the BEAC. Thus, only licensed intermediaries may maintain foreign exchange accounts with their correspondent banks abroad to meet their cash flow needs.
- Approval required: n.r. There are no specific regulations on foreign exchange accounts held by CEMAC residents with banks abroad. However, transactions with the rest of the world involving amounts exceeding CFAF 5 million must be settled by licensed intermediaries.

- Accounts in domestic currency held abroad: No. Accounts in domestic currency held abroad are not permitted, except within the CEMAC.
- Accounts in domestic currency convertible into foreign currency: No.

Imports and Import Payments

Foreign exchange budget No. The exchange regulations do not limit access to foreign exchange. Payments for imports must be made regularly through licensed intermediaries.

Financing requirements for imports No. Economic agents may freely enter into commercial contracts with their partners abroad. These contracts are executed through the banking system, subject to compliance with the exchange regulations.

Minimum financing requirements No. There are no financing requirements.

Advance payment requirements No.

Advance import deposits No.

Documentation requirements for release of foreign exchange for imports Yes. For import payments of less than CFAF 100 million, the licensed intermediary must obtain a pro forma or original invoice, a bill of lading, or the commercial contract, along with the most recent tax receipt or a professional license. Payments of more than CFAF 100 million must be settled through a licensed intermediary, which must check the supporting documents. Legally registered legal entities and declared or certified professionals may be exempt from the requirement to produce supporting documents, provided they submit an annual estimate of imports corroborated by a business forecast.

Domiciliation requirements Yes. Imports valued at more than CFAF 5 million must be domiciled with a resident licensed intermediary.

Preshipment inspection Yes. There are no specific provisions for inspections at the CEMAC level. The member countries may freely apply their own regulations in this regard. In Chad, imports with an f.o.b. value exceeding the equivalent of CFAF 2 million are subject to preshipment inspection.

Letters of credit No. The use of LCs by economic agents for the settlement of transactions is allowed but optional.

Import licenses used as exchange licenses No. Import licenses are not used in the CEMAC countries to restrict the availability of foreign exchange for legitimate trade, as defined in the Compilation Guide. When such licenses exist they are used for trade policy purposes.

Other n.a.

Import licenses and other nontariff measures Yes. In general, CEMAC countries no longer use quantitative restrictions as a means of protecting local production. Merchandise originating from all countries may be freely imported, with the exception of gold, to which special regulations apply.

Capital Transactions
The exchange regulations, including the section on capital flows within the CEMAC, do not apply to transactions between CEMAC member countries. There are no restrictions on most capital flows between CEMAC and non-CEMAC countries, provided they comply with the laws and regulations prohibiting drug financing and trafficking. Certain loans, direct investments, and the issuance, advertisement, and sale of foreign securities within the CEMAC are subject to administrative controls and require approval from the appropriate authorities. Controls on these transactions are applied to countries in the CFA franc area, other than CEMAC member countries, and all non-CFA franc area countries. Moreover, Article 61 of the General Regulations of the Central African Financial Market Supervisory Commission (COSUMAF), which went into effect January 15, 2009, specifies that “when a nonresident legal entity plans a public offering on the Central African regional financial market, it must prepare a disclosure document and submit it to COSUMAF for approval prior to dissemination. The prior approval of the exchange control authority in the various countries concerned must also be obtained.” The article also states that “the issuer must appoint a correspondent (securities dealer) established in a CEMAC member country, where it elects domicile. This correspondent must be responsible for: (1) receiving correspondence from COSUMAF and (2) forwarding to COSUMAF all documents and information required under the laws and regulations or requested by COSUMAF.”

The issuance, advertisement, and sale of foreign securities (shares and bonds issued by foreign enterprises) whose value exceeds CFAF 10 million are subject to MOF approval. Under CEMAC exchange regulations, transactions in capital market securities are treated in the same way as simple borrowing and lending operations, as opposed to direct investments, when the shares or equity held by the individual or legal entity represent less than 10% of the enterprise’s total equity. Borrowing and lending are not regulated by type of instrument or maturity.

floating. The Central Bank of Chile (BCCH) reserves the right to intervene in the foreign exchange market, in exceptional circumstances, to keep the currency near its equilibrium value to avoid costly future reversals. These interventions take the form of transparent, well-founded measures, including explicit definitions of the periods and amounts involved and clearly explained reasons for the intervention. The BCCH usually announces the amount of foreign exchange it intends to buy or sell in its monthly bulletin. It publishes its auction results daily and its reserves weekly. The BCCH has not intervened in the foreign exchange market since 2011.

The exchange rate in the Formal Exchange Market (MCF) is the rate freely agreed by the participants. The BCCH publishes daily exchange rates of the foreign currencies generally accepted in international exchange markets in the Official Gazette, based on the previous day’s transactions in the MCF and, where appropriate, on reports on transactions in international markets. The agreed dollar rate (“dólar acuerdo”) stopped being published effective January 10, 2018. Previously, the BCCH published a daily exchange rate called the dólar acuerdo (agreed dollar rate) effective on the day before release of the publication. This rate was determined according to the Chapter I annex of the Compendium of International Exchange Standards (CNCI) and Decree No. 309 issued by the MOF. The agreed dollar rate was the rate for BCCH transactions in the market (essentially, the issuance of US-dollar-denominated debt securities) for monetary policy purposes and was published daily in the Official Gazette.

As for the daily exchange rates published in the Official Gazette, the Law of the CB requires it to report them. Regarding the use of those rates, it must be noted that the Law of the CB specifically states that the exchange rate in the Formal Exchange Market is the one freely agreed by the intervening parties. Nevertheless, the Law of the CB also requires it to authorize “adjustment systems” (“sistemas de reajuste”) for credit operations in local currency of banks and cooperatives (Article 35.9), and the US dollar and other foreign currencies have been authorized as one of those “adjustment systems.” Only for those specific transactions (credit operations in local currency of banks and cooperatives), the exchange rates published in the Official Gazette are mandatory.

Monetary Policy Committee

The Board of the BCCH sets targets and carries out such functions in accordance with the Organic Constitutional Law. In general, the adoption of Agreements by the Board requires a majority vote by its members. The Board is free to change the target.

Since 2007, the explicit objective of the BCCH has been to maintain annual inflation of the headline consumer price index at about 3% most of the time, with a tolerance range of ±1%. There are no automatic consequences from missing the inflation target, but rather the authorities use their discretion to return inflation to within the target band.

The BCCH executes its monetary policy by influencing the overnight interbank interest rate, the rate at which banks lend to each other from one day to the next. The Monetary Policy Meeting (MPM) is the BCCH’s Board instance to decide any change in the Monetary Policy Rate. In September 2017, the Board decided to reduce the number of scheduled Monetary Policy Meetings to 8 from 12, effective January 1, 2018. The dates for these meetings are published the previous year, although the Board reserves the right to hold special monetary policy meetings if deemed necessary. As of July 31, 2019, the policy rate was 2.5%.

The target corridor band is set symmetrically in relation to the monetary policy rate ±50 basis points. The permanent liquidity facility (PLF) provides overnight liquidity at the monetary policy rate +25 basis points, while the permanent deposits facility absorbs overnight liquidity at the monetary policy rate of −25 basis points.

The BCCH presents its Monetary Policy Report to the Finance Commission on a quarterly basis and the Financial Stability Report every six months. In total, there are 6 hearings in the year, one of which (the September IPOM) is in front of the entire Senate. It should be noted that Article 4 of the Organic Law of the BCCH states that the BCCH must inform the President of the Republic and the Senate of the policies and general rules it sets in the exercise of its functions.

Other n.a.

Transparency Yes.

Publication of votes Yes. The minutes of the monetary policy meeting state whether the decision was unanimous or, if not, the number of votes in favor and against the decision. Effective January 1, 2018, votes are not anonymous, although the reasons behind the votes are.

Publication of minutes Yes. On the day of the monetary policy meeting, the decision adopted is reported to the public through a communiqué published at 6 p.m. The Draft Minutes of Monetary Policy Meetings containing the details and reasons for the decision taken are published 11 business days after the meeting is held. The minutes are published 10 years later.

Publication of inflation forecasts Yes. The Monetary Policy Report (IPOM), which is signed by the Board and published quarterly (in March, June, September, and December), includes the inflation projections.

Foreign exchange market Yes. Commercial banks may freely set their exchange rates in transactions with their clients.

Under Article 39 of the Organic Constitutional Law of the BCCH anyone may freely engage in foreign exchange operations. Without prejudice to that provision, Article 42 of that law authorizes the BCCH to limit execution of certain operations to the MCF. The MCF comprises all banking institutions; the BCCH may authorize other entities and individuals, provided they meet the requirements in Chapter III of the CNCI. A list of these entities is given in the annex to Chapter III. Chapter II also lists operations that must be conducted exclusively through the MCF, executed in the MCF, and reported to the BCCH, and those that need only be reported. Therefore, exchange bureaus may operate in the exchange market, except for transactions that must be executed exclusively through the MCF. At present, no exchange bureaus participate in the MCF, although they are not legally barred from requesting authorization to do so if they meet the CNCI requirements.

authority of the country in which its head office is incorporated. Additionally, in order to grant authorization, the supervisory bodies of both countries must be able to exchange relevant information on these institutions on a reciprocal basis.

In the case of investment holdings or other types of companies incorporated abroad, they must assure the Financial Market Commission, in whatever manner the latter deems necessary, that the provisions of the foregoing paragraph shall be permanently complied with if they hold or subsequently acquire a significant interest in a bank or financial institution in the country in which they are incorporated or in another country.

As for the companies referred to in the previous paragraph, which are incorporated in a country that applies the rules of the Basel Committee, the preceding paragraphs shall not be applicable, if they are obliged to deliver, in the manner and within a time frame determined by the Board, reliable financial information regarding said companies and their subsidiaries, it being understood that such information emanates from the supervisory bodies. When these companies are not subject to the supervision of a body or are not required to provide such information to the body, the information must be endorsed by internationally recognized external auditors. In order to grant the corresponding authorization to these companies, they must assure the Board, in the manner it determines, that the provisions of this paragraph will be permanently complied with when they hold or subsequently acquire a significant interest in a bank or financial institution in the country in which they are incorporated or in another country.

In the event of non-compliance with the provisions of this article, the provisions of the second and final paragraphs of Article 36 of this law shall apply.

For the purposes of this article, a significant shareholding in a Chilean bank is considered to be one which, according to the rules of Article 36, requires authorization from the Board.”

Other managed arrangement
Yes. China officially maintains a de jure managed floating exchange rate arrangement with a view to keeping the RMB exchange rate stable at an adaptive and equilibrium level based on market supply and... demand with reference to a basket of currencies to preserve the stability of the Chinese economy and financial markets. The floating band of the RMB’s trading prices is 2% against the US dollar in the interbank foreign exchange market—that is, on each business day, the trading prices of the RMB against the US dollar in the market may fluctuate within a band of ±2% around the midrate released that day by China’s Foreign Exchange Trading System (CFETS). The People’s Bank of China (PBC) announced that the RMB’s floating range would be expanded in an orderly manner, based on the developments of the foreign exchange market and economic and financial situation. Based on the market demand and their pricing capacity, banks can determine their quotes of RMB against other currencies. There is no limit on the purchasing and selling prices of spot exchange and cash, which are determined by market supply and demand (PBC No. 2014/188).

Since June 2018, the RMB increased its volatility against the basket of 24 currencies included in the CFETS index. Accordingly, the de facto exchange rate arrangement was reclassified to other managed from crawl-like, effective June 22, 2018. The CFETS publishes its exchange rate index, and other RMB indices based on the Bank for International Settlements (BIS) currency basket and the SDR currency basket.

Floating

Free floating

Official exchange rate Yes. The PBC authorizes the CFETS to publish the daily midrates for the RMB against the Australian dollar, Canadian dollar, Danish krone, euro, Hong Kong dollar, Hungarian forint, Japanese yen, Korean won, Malaysian ringgit, Mexican peso, New Zealand dollar, Norwegian krone, Polish zloty, pound sterling, Russian ruble, Saudi Arabian riyal, South African rand, Singapore dollar, Swedish krona, Swiss franc, Turkish lira, UAE dirham, Thai baht, and the US dollar at 9:15 a.m. each working day to serve as the day’s midrates for the interbank spot foreign exchange market (including the OTC method and the bid-offer method). At the same time, the CFETS also publishes the daily reference rate (similar to the midrate) of the RMB against Kazakhstani tenge, Mongolian tögrög, and Cambodian riel. For bank’s counter transactions (that is, bank-customer transactions), banks can determine their RMB quotes against other currencies. There is no limit on the purchasing and selling prices of spot foreign exchange and cash, which are determined by market supply and demand.

The method for determining the RMB–US dollar midrate is as follows: the CFETS, before the daily interbank foreign exchange market opening quote, asks for quotes from all market makers in the interbank foreign exchange market and uses their quoted prices as the calculation sample for the RMB–US dollar midrate. The quotes for the US dollar must refer to the closing price of the previous day and take into account foreign exchange supply and demand and changes in the exchange rates of the main international currencies. After eliminating the highest and lowest quotes, it takes the weighted average of the remaining market makers’ quotes and obtains the daily RMB–US dollar midrate. The weighting is determined by the CFETS based on indicators including the transaction volume of the quoting parties in the interbank foreign exchange market and the circumstances of the quotes. The method for determining the midrate of the RMB against the Australian dollar, Canadian dollar, Danish krone, euro, Hungarian forint, Japanese yen, Korean won, Malaysian ringgit, Mexican peso,
New Zealand dollar, Norwegian krone, Polish zloty, pound sterling, Russian ruble, Saudi Arabian riyal, South African rand, Singapore dollar, Swedish krona, Swiss franc, Turkish lira, UAE dirham, and Thai baht is as follows: the CFETS, before the daily interbank foreign exchange market opens, asks for quotes from market makers of the corresponding currencies in the interbank foreign exchange market, eliminates the highest and lowest quotes, takes the average of the remaining market makers’ quotes, and obtains the daily RMB midrates against the corresponding currencies.

The midrate against the Hong Kong dollar is determined by the CFETS through cross-rates based, respectively, on the day’s midrate of the RMB against the US dollar and the exchange rate for the US dollar against the Hong Kong dollar on international foreign exchange markets at 9:00 a.m.

The reference rates for the Kazakhstani tenge, Mongolian tögrög, and Cambodian riel are determined by the CFETS by asking for quotes from quoting banks before the opening quote and then taking a simple average of the quotes.

The CFETS publishes its exchange rate index, and other RMB indices based on the Bank for International Settlements (BIS) currency basket and the SDR currency basket. The number of currencies included in the CFETS RMB currency basket was increased from 13 to 24 in 2017. The new currencies account for about 21% of the new basket and are included as they have become directly traded in the onshore foreign exchange market in 2016.

Monetary aggregate target Yes.

The Law of the People’s Republic of China on the PBC stipulates that “the aim of monetary policies must be to maintain the stability of the value of the currency and thereby promote economic growth.” The current reality in China requires that monetary policy take into account multiple objectives such as inflation, growth, employment, balance of payments, and also set aside space for financial stability and financial reforms. Therefore, in developing and implementing monetary policies, the PBC needs to consider multiple factors such as currency stability and economic growth, and to properly adjust the weights of each objective according to key tasks of economic management.

To effectively achieve the monetary policy objectives, in recent years, the PBC has continuously enriched the monetary policy toolkit and applied a set of comprehensive quantity- and price-based tools to flexibly adjust the banking system liquidity, guide the market interest rates, and promote an appropriate money and credit growth. At the same time, the PBC constantly improves the monetary policy framework, promoting the transformation from a mainly quantity-based to a mainly price-based framework. Moreover, based on lessons and experiences from the global financial crisis and taking into account the specific conditions in China, the PBC also took a lead in using macroprudential policies to guide the overall credit growth and better prevent systemic financial risks.

The floating band of the RMB’s trading prices against the US dollar in the interbank foreign exchange market is 2%—that is, each business day, the trading prices of the RMB against the US dollar may fluctuate within a band of ±2% around the central parity released on the same day by the CFETS. The trading prices for the RMB against the Australian dollar, Canadian dollar, euro, Hong Kong dollar, Japanese yen, New Zealand dollar, pound sterling, and Singapore dollar float within a 3% range of the current day’s midrates for the RMB against these currencies. The trading prices against the Malaysian ringgit, the Russian ruble, Swiss franc, Korean won, UAE dirham, Saudi Arabian riyal, Hungarian forint, Polish zloty, Danish krone, Swedish krona, Norwegian krone, Turkish lira, and Mexican peso float within a 5% range of the current day’s midrates of the RMB against these currencies. The trading prices of the RMB against the South African rand and the Thai baht float within a 10% range of their respective midrates on the current trading day.

The trading prices of the RMB against the Kazakhstani tenge, the Mongolian tögrög, and the Cambodian riel in regional interbank markets float within a 10% range of their respective reference rates on the current trading day.

As of December 31, 2018, 499 banks were qualified to engage in spot foreign exchange settlement and sales operations. Of these, 95 are qualified to initiate forward and swap transactions for their customers. Banks may determine their RMB exchange rates to the US dollar with their clients without any limit on the spread, based on market supply and demand.

Starting in August 2008, the State Administration of Foreign Exchange (SAFE) launched a pilot project to license institutions to provide foreign currency conversion services to individuals. As of July 17, 2019, there were 73 institutions across the country licensed to provide such services. These institutions are only permitted to handle banknote conversion transactions for individuals; they are not permitted to handle foreign currency payments and transfers, maintain accounts abroad, or engage in foreign exchange transactions directly with the PBC. The licensed institutions may freely determine the currencies they trade unless otherwise required by the State, and set their exchange rates according to relevant regulations of the PBC and SAFE regarding banks’ exchange rates.

Foreign CBs (monetary authorities) and other reserve management institutions, international financial organizations, sovereign wealth funds, offshore RMB operating and clearing banks, and participant banks may enter the Chinese interbank foreign exchange market and initiate various types of foreign exchange transactions, including spot, forward, swap, and option, through one or more of the following three avenues: through the PBC as their agent, through a Chinese interbank foreign exchange market member as their agent, and by directly becoming a foreign member of the Chinese interbank foreign exchange market. Transaction methods include OTC and price-matching, without limits on the amount.
Interbank market

Within the trading band, banks may independently decide the buying and selling prices for interbank market transactions based on market supply and demand. As of July 17, 2019, 675 institutions were members of the interbank spot foreign exchange market. The interbank foreign exchange market launched direct trading of the RMB against Malaysian ringgit (August 19, 2010), Russian ruble (November 22, 2010), Thai baht (December 19, 2011), Japanese yen (May 29, 2012), Australian dollar (April 9, 2013), the New Zealand dollar (March 19, 2014), the pound sterling (June 19, 2014), euro (September 30, 2014), Singapore dollar (October 28, 2014), Kazakhstani tenge (December 15, 2014), Swiss francs (November 9, 2015), South African rand (June 20, 2016), Korean won (June 27, 2016), UAE dirham (September 26, 2016) and the Saudi Arabian riyal (September 26, 2016), Canadian dollar (November 14, 2016), Hungarian forint, Polish zloty, Danish krone, Swedish krona, Norwegian krone, Turkish lira, and Mexican peso (all on December 12, 2016).

The midrate of the trading band does not need to be between bank’s bid and ask price. The PBC intervenes in the market through market makers, which propose their quotes based on market prices.

For current transactions and payments

No. Enterprises and individuals in all regions of China may settle cross-border transactions for current account items using RMB. Effective January 4, 2018, the deregulation of personal cross-border receipts and payments of renminbi under current accounts was complete (Yin Fa [2018] No. 3). Eligible institutions include all types of financial institutions, including commercial banks, insurance companies, securities companies, fund management companies, and other asset management institutions, that meet the requirement listed in PBC Announcement [2016] No. 3 and are legally registered and established outside China; the investment products issued to clients by the aforementioned financial institutions according to law and in compliance with rules and regulations, and other medium- and long-term institutional investors approved by the PBC, such as pension funds, charitable funds, and endowment funds, may engage in bond and spot bond trading approved by the PBC on the interbank bond market. All types of foreign institutional investors can also carry out transactions such as bond lending, bond forwards, forward interest rate agreements, and interest rate swaps based on hedging needs, without investment limits. RMB clearing banks may participate in the domestic interbank lending market. Foreign RMB clearing banks and foreign participating banks may carry out bond repo business in the interbank bond market. Foreign CBs or monetary authorities, international financial organizations, and sovereign wealth funds may conduct interbank market transactions permitted by the PBC, such as spot bond trading, bond repos, or bond lending without restriction on the amounts. The financing ratio of domestic correspondent banks with respect to the renminbi accounts of foreign participating banks must not exceed 3% of the domestic correspondent bank’s total renminbi deposits at the end of the previous year. Qualified foreign institutional investors (QFII) may invest in domestic securities markets, including stocks, bonds, and warrants traded on securities exchanges, and fixed-income products, securities investment funds, stock index futures, and other instruments permitted by the China Securities Regulatory Commission (CSRC) traded on the interbank bond market. and regions, including Australia, Canada, Chile, France, Germany, Hungary, Ireland, Japan, South Korea, Luxembourg, Malaysia, Qatar, Singapore, Switzerland, Thailand, the United Arab Emirates, the United Kingdom, and the United States. Initially, only Hong Kong subsidiaries of domestic fund management companies and securities companies were authorized for such operations on approval with certain percentage restrictions on asset allocation. Later, under the expanded RQFII program, all qualified financial institutions in the above-mentioned countries and regions were allowed to invest in domestic securities markets using RMB proceeds raised abroad. Domestic banks, securities, and insurance institutions may invest in external capital markets as qualified domestic institutional investors (QDIs) or RMB qualified domestic institutional investors (RQDIIs). QDIIs have an overall total limit on the size of their investments (currently US$180 billion), but RQDIIs have no size limit. However, they need to invest in security products denominated in RMB. As of December 31, 2018, a total of 152 QDIIs had obtained limits totaling US$103.2 billion.

On April 30, 2017, the PBC published Yin Ban Fa [2018] No. 81, clarifying that QDIIs can use RMB to invest in offshore financial products valued in RMB. On May 2, 2018, the Shanghai headquarters of the PBC published the supporting Shanghai Headquarters Notice (2018) No. 1, clarifying requirements related to macroprudential management and information disclosures of RQDIIs.

Hong Kong institutions and individuals may invest in domestic A shares through Hong Kong brokerage agencies and institutions (northbound SH-HK (Shanghai-Hong Kong) stock connect and SZ-HK (Shenzhen-Hong Kong) stock connect) and domestic institutions and individuals may invest in Hong Kong shares through domestic securities companies (southbound northbound SH-HK stock connect and SZ-HK stock connect). The Shanghai-Hong Kong Stock Connect has a daily cap on investments, and investment targets are limited. Legal person financial institutions and enterprises in China can freely carry out cross-border financing in RMB or in foreign currencies within the limit determined by their capital and net assets. They do not need to get the approval from the PBC or SAFE in advance. Domestic branches of foreign banks (including banks in Hong Kong SAR, Macau SAR, and Taiwan Province of China) may freely conduct domestic and foreign currency cross-border financing within the limit determined by their capital or net asset, without being subject to PBC and SAFE advance review and approval requirement. To support the engagement of QDIIs in various types of foreign investment, in addition to the QDII plan, since 2013, the SAFE launched a qualified domestic investment enterprise (QDIE) pilot program in Shenzhen, and a qualified domestic limited partnership (QDLP) pilot program in Shanghai. These programs enable domestic investors who meet qualifications to raise funds domestically and invest them abroad in securities, private equity, commodities, and real estate. The QDLP/QDIE schemes are currently pilot operations; the SAFE exercises regional quota controls, and the competent local
The financial administrative authorities have led the formation of joint review teams charged with managing the qualifications of qualified institutions and individual institution quotas within the pilot regions. Under the QDLP and QDIE schemes, under preconditions of authenticity and regulatory compliance, investors can invest overseas in securities, private equity, commodities, and real estate. Effective April 24, 2018, the quota for the QDLP scheme was increased to US$5 billion from US$2 billion and that for the QDIE scheme was increased to US$5 billion from US$2.5 billion.

Foreign CBs, monetary authorities, international financial organizations, and sovereign wealth funds may initiate bond forward and interest rate swaps, forward rate agreements, and other interbank market transactions permitted by the PBC without limitation on the amount. Domestic institutions can engage in cross-border RMB lending and must obtain approval. The sum of their overseas RMB and foreign currency loan balances should not exceed 30% of shareholder’s equity as indicated by the audited financial statements of the previous year. Additional requirements on the loan’s objectives, funding sources, lending period, usage, withdrawal, etc., are also in place.

Domestic correspondent banks may offer RMB financing accounts to banks participating in foreign RMB operations within certain limits and maturities. Domestic enterprises and financial institutions may, subject to macroprudential policies, attract RMB funds from abroad. Domestic parent banks or head offices may provide RMB liquidity support to foreign RMB clearing banks. Within the present institutional framework of foreign debt and foreign lending, resident enterprises may use RMB to manage cross-border credit business.

Held domestically  Yes. Resident institutions setting up foreign exchange accounts for current account transactions and resident individuals setting up foreign currency savings accounts, etc., do not need to register with or be approved by the SAFE. Resident individuals may, with valid identification documents, open foreign exchange savings accounts and, in accordance with the related SAFE regulations, purchase foreign exchange and deposit it in foreign exchange savings accounts up to the amount equivalent to US$50,000 a year at banks on the basis of personal identification. Cumulative withdrawals of foreign currency by individuals not exceeding the equivalent of US$10,000 a day can be transacted directly at banks. If the cumulative total withdrawals exceed this amount, the transactions must be filed in advance with the bank’s local foreign exchange bureau, based on a valid identification document and supporting evidence on the use of the cash withdrawn by the individual.

Approval required  Yes.

Mainland institutions opening foreign exchange accounts for capital account transactions must register with or be approved by the SAFE. Generally, mainland institutions open an account for current account trading directly with the bank. Only a small number of special business current accounts (foreign currency cash accounts and offshore foreign exchange accounts) require SAFE approval. To borrow and raise external debt, a domestic bank may directly open the necessary accounts in domestic or foreign banks and follow the procedures of drawing and repaying external debt.

Held abroad  Yes.

Approval required  Yes. Export enterprises may open foreign exchange accounts abroad to deposit proceeds from bona fide and legitimate export transactions with SAFE registration. To deposit the foreign exchange proceeds from exporting goods abroad, enterprises should meet the following requirements: (1) they should have proceeds from exports and have payment needs abroad in line with the Detailed Implementation Rules for the Guidelines for the Foreign Exchange Administration of Trade in Goods; (2) they must not have violated the foreign exchange management rules in the past two years; (3) they should have in place a well-established internal control system on making deposits abroad; (4) other requirements as prescribed by the SAFE. When a service trade enterprise deposits its proceeds in foreign currencies abroad, it should be subject to the following conditions: (1) it should have proceeds in foreign currencies from service trade and continue to have a need to make payment in foreign currencies; (2) it must not have violated the foreign exchange management rules in the past two years; (3) it should have in place a well-established internal control system on making deposits abroad; (4) it should engage in service trade that is related to trade of goods; (5) for domestic enterprise groups that make deposits abroad and have centralized collection and payment system, they should have a centralized system for their domestically held foreign exchange in the first place; and (6) other requirements as prescribed by the SAFE. Domestic enterprise groups that have a centralized collection and payment system may designate one domestic member enterprise (including finance company) as the main enterprise to carry out centralized collection and payment of foreign exchange proceeds from overseas service trade for all member enterprises that participate in overseas deposit business. Other resident entities that meet the following requirements may open foreign currency accounts abroad with SAFE approval: (1) The institution receives recurrent and sporadic proceeds abroad and needs a foreign currency account abroad to pool such proceeds before repatriating them. (2) The institution makes recurrent and sporadic payments abroad and needs a foreign currency account abroad. (3) The institution engages in project contracting abroad and needs a foreign currency account abroad. (4) The institution issues foreign-currency-denominated securities abroad and needs a foreign currency account abroad. (5) The institution has special operational requirements abroad and needs a foreign currency account abroad.

Resident entities must submit regular reports to the SAFE regarding changes in funds in their foreign currency account abroad.

| Accounts in domestic currency held abroad | Yes. | Resident entities may deposit their RMB proceeds received from RMB cross-border transactions in their offshore accounts without SAFE approval/registration. |
| Accounts in domestic currency convertible into foreign currency | Yes. | When making external payments, institutions and individuals must present valid evidence and commercial documents to designated foreign exchange banks to convert domestic currency to foreign currency. Current account transactions do not require permission, but capital account transactions require permission or registration; cross-border payments for direct investment require registration with SAFE or a bank. The registration serves information collection and statistical purposes. For cases subject to registration, institutions need only to comply with the relevant laws and regulations. Because approval involves market access, the authorities have the discretion to grant approval (for example, QDII quota). Annual quota controls are in place for the settlement of foreign exchange by individuals and the purchase of foreign exchange by domestic individuals. The annual quota is the equivalent of US$50,000 an individual a year. Within the annual quota, these transactions can be completed at the bank based on valid identification; where the annual quota has been exceeded, for current accounts, these transactions can be completed at the bank based on valid identification and documentation of the existence of a trading quota; under capital accounts, such transactions are completed in accordance with the relevant regulations concerning individual foreign exchange controls for capital accounts. |

Nonresident Accounts

Foreign exchange accounts permitted | Yes. | Foreign individuals with valid identification documents may open foreign exchange savings accounts in banks. Domestic banks that open foreign exchange accounts for foreign institutions should verify the documents provided such as their proof of legal registration abroad. Pursuant to the Notice of the State Administration of Foreign Exchange Concerning Questions Related to the Administration of Foreign Exchange Accounts of Foreign Institutions, without approval, funds in the domestic foreign exchange accounts of foreign institutions (as referred to in this document—-institutions legally registered and established outside China (including the Hong Kong, Macau, and Taiwan regions)) must not be directly or covertly used for foreign exchange settlements. Foreign institutions in free trade zones are permitted to settle foreign exchange using their domestic foreign exchange accounts. Where RMB is remitted onshore for use after settlements of foreign exchange, domestic banks must first review the valid commercial documents and vouchers of domestic institutions and domestic individuals concerned before processing the transactions, in accordance with the relevant provisions on cross-border transactions. |
On registration by SAFE or a bank, foreign investors may establish foreign exchange accounts to retain foreign exchange related to direct investment.

Hong Kong and Macao RMB business clearing banks may open RMB clearing accounts with the PBC; other RMB clearing banks may open RMB clearing accounts at their China head office or at branches designated by their China head offices. Domestic correspondent banks may open RMB interbank current accounts for foreign participating banks and act as agents for foreign participating banks to carry out cross-border RMB payments. Account financing is also available on correspondent bank accounts. Foreign participating banks may use RMB funds from RMB cross-border trade and investment business including RMB funds in domestic interbank current accounts to invest in China’s interbank bond market subject to conditions.

Nonresidents who engage in cross-border RMB business settlements may open RMB bank settlement accounts domestically. Foreign CBs and similar institutional investors investing in the interbank bond and foreign exchange markets may open special RMB deposit accounts at the PBC or at commercial banks.

Foreign individuals may convert and transfer abroad RMB (1) obtained from their legitimate current transactions in China and (2) originally converted but not yet completely used, in accordance with the relevant SAFE regulations. Nonresident enterprises may convert to foreign exchange RMB funds deposited on settlement accounts in domestic banks and transfer abroad. Domestic correspondent banks and nonresident clearing banks may process trade of goods and services and direct investments for nonresident participating banks and enter China’s interbank foreign exchange market to clear their positions.

Foreign institutions issuing RMB bonds in China may follow rules and open nonresident RMB accounts to deposit proceeds from bond issuance.

The SAFE registers and maintains a list of resident institutions that have trade receipts and payments in foreign currencies and publishes the list through an electronic information platform for financial institutions. Institutions registered at the SAFE on this list may directly buy foreign exchange from banks and make payments for legitimate needs. If payment is made in foreign currency to a foreign party and the settlement is on a payment on delivery basis, companies must provide one of the following: a customs clearing form, import contract, or invoice; if the settlement is on an LC or collection basis, a commercial invoice is required in accordance with international practice; if the settlement is on a prepaid loan basis, an import contract or invoice must be provided. When service trade transactions (including transport, travel, communication, building installation, labor contracting, insurance, financial, computer and information, exclusive right to use and franchise sports, cultural and entertainment services, other commercial services, government services) exceed an amount of US$50,000, the resident payer must also submit a “Taxation Registration Form for Foreign Payments under Trade in Services and Other Items” to the financial institution making the transfer. The “Taxation Registration Form for Foreign Payments under Trade in Services and Other Items” confirms that the withholding tax has been paid and that foreign exchange may be paid through a financial institution. 1. Travel, conference, product exhibition, and other expenses incurred overseas by domestic institutions;

Exports and Export Proceeds

Repatriation requirements

Yes. Foreign exchange proceeds of resident entities may be repatriated to China or deposited abroad; the conditions and terms for deposit abroad are regulated by the SAFE based on the international balance of payments status and foreign exchange management needs. Resident entities with bona fide and legitimate export revenues and external payment needs in line with foreign exchange regulations, who have not violated the foreign exchange regulations for the past two years, and have adequate internal control systems for export revenue deposited abroad may open accounts abroad and deposit the proceeds from bona fide and legitimate export transactions after registration with SAFE. The registration needs to be revised in case the total funds deposited abroad annually exceed the amount of funds originally registered with SAFE. Resident entities may freely determine the period for keeping their deposit abroad, except when SAFE requires the repatriation of the funds because the entity violated the regulations. The RMB revenue of resident entities and individuals may be repatriated to China or deposited externally without PBC or SAFE approval.

Other export taxes
Yes.
Export rebates are an important component of China’s VAT system. China currently does not offer tax rebates in the full amount for all export goods. If the legally prescribed VAT rate is not exceeded, China implements differential tax rebates based on the nature of the goods to reflect in the export costs the expense of environmental pollution produced by some export products to promote environmental protection. By selectively increasing export costs for some goods, China actively reduces those goods' competitiveness in international trading, thereby reducing international trade friction. Effective November 1, 2018, the tax rebate rates for China’s export goods were simplified to five classes: 16%, 13%, 10%, 6%, and 0% from seven (16%, 15%, 13%, 10%, 9%, 5%, and 0%). Effective April 1, 2019, to promote the use of the VAT and integrate relevant content of the 2019 VAT reform, the export rebate rates for the five classes were further adjusted to 13%, 10%, 9%, 6%, and 0% from 16%, 13%, 10%, 6%, and 0%. China’s current export tax rebate policy complies with WTO rules and requirements and does not constitute an export subsidy.

- To residents from nonresidents: Yes. Cross-border guarantees by residents and nonresidents are not subject to SAFE approval. Under certain conditions, domestic institutions may accept guarantees offered by foreign institutions or individuals. Controls on direct investment

Yes.

Outward direct investment

Yes. In 2014, the Ministry of Commerce amended the Administrative Measures on Overseas Investment, implementing an administrative model that “primarily relies on a filing system and is supported by approvals” for enterprises investing and incorporating overseas. With the exception of overseas investments in sensitive countries and regions and sensitive industries, for which an approval system is in place, all other overseas investments are administered using a filing system. Countries for which approvals are required refer to countries that have no diplomatic relationship with the People’s Republic of China and countries that are subject to UN sanctions; when necessary, the Ministry of Commerce may additionally announce a list of other countries for which approval management is required. Industries for which approvals are required are those that involve the export of products and technologies with export restrictions placed by the People’s Republic of China, and industries that affect more than one country’s (region’s) interests. At present, 99% of overseas investment matters are administered using the filing system. According to the Administrative Measures on Overseas Investment, for overseas investors that fall under administration by the filing system, state-owned key enterprises submit filings to the Ministry of Commerce, and local enterprises submit filings to the local provincial-level regulatory authority for commerce.

Domestic legal entities may make direct outward investments after filing a record. Outward investments in nonsensitive industries are subject to record management. More specifically, outward investments carried out by enterprises managed by the central government, as well as those with funding from Chinese sources exceeding US$300 million or its equivalents in RMB and carried out by local enterprises, should be recorded at the NDRC; outward investment with funding from the Chinese sources below US$300 million or its equivalents in RMB and carried out by local enterprises should be recorded at the provincial authorities. Effective March 1, 2018, NDRC Decree No. 9 governing outbound investment by Chinese companies was replaced by Decree No. 11. The NDRC revised the list of sensitive industries by delisting some of the industries, including operation of telecommunication; infrastructures; large-scale land development; main power transmission lines and power grids, and adding some other industries, including R&D, manufacturing and maintenance of weapons and military equipment; real estate; hotels; movie studios; entertainment; sports clubs; and equity funds or investment platforms established overseas without specific real-economy projects. Similar to Decree No. 9, any amount of investment in sensitive industries requires NDRC approval.

Effective March 1, 2018, as per Decree No. 11, approval requirement for outward foreign direct investment above US$1 billion in nonsensitive industries was abolished.

Effective March 1, 2018, overseas investment by domestic natural persons through foreign companies or Hong Kong, Macau or Taiwan companies under their control, which was outside the scope of Decree No. 9, is subject to regulations specified in Decree No. 11. Specifically, NDRC approval is required for investment in sensitive industries, and for investments in nonsensitive projects that exceed US$300 million or its equivalent in RMB, the NDRC must be informed of the basic project information, but no review or approval is required.

Outward direct investment should also be registered at banks. Banks may process such operations as opening accounts and remitting funds for enterprises on the basis of the three principles of “know your customer,” “know your business,” and “conduct due diligence.” Domestic institutions may use a variety of legitimate asset sources for outward direct investment, including their own foreign exchange funds, foreign currency loans obtained domestically in accordance with regulations, foreign exchange purchased using RMB, or tangible or intangible assets and such profits as are kept abroad. During the preparatory stage of formal start-up of a foreign project, resident entities may remit funds overseas in an amount not to exceed the smaller value of US$300 million and 15% of the Chinese investor’s total investment.

To support competent domestic institutions in carrying out various types of outbound investments, in addition to the QDII scheme, the SAFE has launched QDIE pilots in Shenzhen and QDLP in Shanghai since 2013. The QDIE scheme, with a total investment limit of US$1 billion at its origination, allows domestic investors that meet the qualifications to raise funds domestically to invest overseas in securities, private equities, commodities, real estates, etc. Similarly, the QDLP scheme allows global fund managers to establish limited partnerships and raise funds domestically with domestic investors to invest in the overseas financial markets. Effective April 24, 2018, the quota for the QDLP scheme was increased to US$5 billion from US$2 billion and that for the QDIE scheme was increased to US$5 billion from US$2.5 billion. Outward direct investment by state-owned enterprises (SOEs) and private enterprises should be filed with or approved by the NDRC and Ministry of Commerce. Except for setting up foreign special-purpose entities, domestic individuals are not allowed to make direct outward investment.

Inward direct investment  Yes. A pre-establishment national treatment plus negative list management system is in place for inward direct investments in China. Management by review and approval is in place for cases that involve special administrative measures for access specified by the state; for cases that do not involve special administrative measures for access specified by the state, a filing system is in place. Foreign direct investments in China are classified into four categories: encouraged, allowed, restricted, and prohibited. Nonresidents may invest in China, provided they are in compliance with the requirements of laws and regulations concerning foreign investment and other laws and regulations. Foreign enterprises and individuals that establish a partnership enterprise in China must apply for registration of the enterprise to the local administrative department for industry and commerce authorized by the State Administration for Industry and Commerce; approval of the Ministry of Commerce is not required in such cases. Partnership enterprises whose main business is investment are subject to additional government provisions. Conversion of the invested funds from foreign exchange to RMB may be carried out as determined by the enterprise. FDI should also be registered at banks.

The aggregate balance of medium- and long-term foreign debt and outstanding short-term foreign debt of foreign-invested enterprises may not exceed the difference between total investment and registered capital. “Total investment” means the sum of construction funds and working capital required for production as stipulated in joint investment contracts and enterprise articles of association. Within this scope, preapproval is not required to borrow from nonresidents; however, the borrower must complete the SAFE registration procedures. Converting such funds to RMB does not require SAFE approval.

Foreign investors currently are not subject to restrictions in investing in the B shares of domestically listed companies. Foreign investors may make strategic investments in A shares of domestically listed companies, but are subject to the following restrictions. (1) Investors must (a) be legally incorporated and operating foreign legal entities or other organizations that are financially sound and have good credit and mature management experience; (b) have actual offshore assets totaling no less than US$100 million or actual offshore assets under management totaling no less than US$500 million, parent company actual offshore assets totaling no less than US$100 million, or actual offshore assets under management totaling no less than US$500 million; (c) have a sound governance structure and good internal control systems with standardized operations; (d) have received no material penalties from domestic or foreign regulatory agencies in the past three years (including parent company). (6) Shareholders of government-owned shares in listed companies must comply with the relevant regulations.

Foreign investors may engage in direct investment activities in China using RMB legally obtained abroad. Legitimately obtained RMB includes RMB obtained by foreign investors from (1) cross-border trade settlement in RMB; (2) mainland China in the form of profits and earnings from equity swaps, reduction of invested capital, clearing, and advance recovery of investment; and (3) the issuance of bonds and shares denominated in RMB abroad and other ways. Banks may settle inward direct investment transactions in RMB on the basis of the three principles of “know your customer,” “know your business,” and “conduct due diligence,” relying on the income and payment instruction submitted by the enterprises.

Profit of less than US$50,000 from direct investments may, following a bona fide test by the bank, be repatriated without documentary proof. For the repatriation of profits above US$50,000, banks must verify documents related to the current profit repatriation, including the board of directors’ resolutions on the distribution of profits (or the partners’ resolution on the distribution of profits), originals of tax filing forms, and audited financial reports.

“A” shares of listed companies may not be transferred for three years. Premature liquidation before expiration of the term of operations requires approval of the original reviewing and approving authority or a judicial decision. On liquidation, after registering with the relevant bank, a foreign investor may purchase foreign currency and initiate repatriation of funds. RMB funds obtained from liquidation by foreign investors may be remitted abroad by banks, with no need for PBC approval.

The regulations governing direct investment apply.

Purchases of real estate abroad by resident entities are conducted similarly to direct investment abroad. Insurance companies may invest overseas subject to approval. The aggregate balance of insurance companies’ overseas investment may not exceed 15% of the insurance company’s total assets at the end of the previous quarter. A single investment in equity and fixed-income assets may not exceed 5% and a single investment in the same legal entity may not exceed 20% of the insurance company’s total assets at the end of the previous quarter. The balance of foreign and domestic real estate investments may not exceed 30% of the insurance company’s total assets at the end of the previous quarter. The total balance does not include real estate purchased with insurance companies’ own funds for their own use, the balance of which may not exceed 50% of their total net assets at the end of the previous quarter. A single investment in real estate may not exceed 5% of the insurance company’s total assets at the end of the previous quarter.

The de jure exchange rate arrangement is free floating. All foreign exchange transactions are conducted at the market-determined exchange rate. Effective September 28, 2018, the Board of Directors of the Banco de la República (BR) decided to implement a program of gradual accumulation of international reserves via monthly auctions of put options. This program began on October 1, 2018, and was suspended on June 4, 2019. The reserve accumulation put options may be exercised when the representative market rate (RMR) falls below its recent average (average for the preceding 20 business days). The amounts of the auctions are announced in the invitation. The participants pay a premium set via the uniform price auction mechanism. The option exercise exchange rate is the RMR in effect on the day the option is exercised. Entities that comply with Regulatory Circular DODM 143 participate in this program.

The BR publishes daily data on interventions on the exchange market. The BR publishes the date, amount, and mechanism. When an intervention involves options, the information is published on the day that the option is exercised. Each month (on the fifth business day) the BR publishes a press release indicating the amount purchased or sold in the previous month (aggregate monthly amount).

Exchange rate performance in 2018 was affected by the dollar/monetary policy outlook in the United States, periods of volatility in emerging market economies, and oil price developments. The peso appreciated at the start of 2018 in line with the increase in oil prices but subsequently weakened in response to uncertainty about the presidential elections, dollar strength, and emerging market turbulence.

In 2019, the performance of the Colombian peso was consistent with that of other emerging market currencies, particularly other currencies in the region. Its performance is explained primarily by the general performance of the US dollar in response to monetary policy changes in that country. Other factors that have affected the exchange rate include pressures of trade negotiations on global growth, oil price developments, and reports of economic weakness in some European countries. Locally, the Colombian peso has been influenced by the uncertainty regarding the level and possible increase of the current account deficit and the likelihood of meeting the fiscal targets in the short and medium term.

The de facto exchange rate arrangement is classified as floating.

Official exchange rate

Yes.

The RMR is the economic indicator of the peso–US dollar exchange rate; it is not an official exchange rate. It is used as a reference for the quotation and settlement of foreign exchange transactions, for transactions indexed to the US dollar, and for the conversion of accounts in foreign currency to local currency. The RMR is the weighted average amount of US dollar buy/sell operations in exchange for Colombian legal tender, for settlement in both currencies on the same day, conducted by exchange market intermediaries (EMIs) during the hours of operation established by the BR in its general regulations.

To calculate the RMR, derivative operations must be excluded, as well as operations conducted by EMIs with entities other than those supervised by the Office of the Financial Superintendence of Colombia (SFC) and with the State-Ministry of Finance and Public Credit. Also excluded are operations by EMIs with the following entities supervised by the SFC: foreign financial entities, foreign reinsurers, foreign financial entities with no trade offices, and representative offices of the foreign securities market.

The RMR is calculated daily and certified by the SFC-based available information, in accordance with the methodology established by BR in the External Regulatory Circular DODM.

The Bank of the Republic may intervene in the foreign exchange market to regulate financial market liquidity and the normal functioning of the domestic and external payments of the economy, to prevent undesirable exchange rate fluctuations, and to increase and reduce international reserves, in accordance with the directives of the Board of Directors, through spot or forward foreign exchange purchases or sales, to or from the EMIs indicated in Article 8(1), (2), or (3) of R.E. 1 of 2018 of the BR Board, foreign exchange clearing and settlement systems, and the State-Ministry of Finance and Public Credit, as long as they are registered with the BR as EMIs and have permanent instructions from the BR. The authorization to participate depends on the intervention mechanism, as explained below.

The BR may conduct intervention operations through various systems and mechanisms. The authorized intervention operations are:
(1) Direct uniform price auction sales of put or call options;
(2) Direct uniform price or discriminatory price auction sales of foreign exchange with three minutes of bids;
(3) Spot sales of foreign exchange by means of foreign exchange swap contracts, at BR-determined rates, in auctions or OTC transactions.

Delays, incompletion of intervention operations, and errors in the price of auctions by authorized agents are subject to sanctions.
Option auction:
May be conducted with banks, financial corporations, finance companies, and financial cooperatives (provided they are authorized as EMIs by the SFC), the State-Ministry of Finance and Public Credit, Financiera de Desarrollo Nacional S.A., and Banco de Comercio Exterior (BANCOLDEX) whose capital equals the minimum amount required for the establishment of a financial corporation. Effective January 31, 2019, stock brokerages whose capital equals the minimum amount required for the establishment of a financial corporation may also be counterparties.

The BR sells put or call options in uniform price auctions. The participants must offer the option premium (bid price expressed in pesos per US$1,000), as well as the amount of the bid in dollars. In the auction, the bids are arranged in strict descending order based on the amount of the premium, and all bids with a premium equal to or exceeding the premium at which the auction limit is met (hereinafter the cutoff premium) are approved. All approved bids must pay the cutoff premium. The BR may partially approve bids it believes could give rise to an unacceptable concentration. The BR reserves the right to approve a put or call options auction below the announced amount or to declare the auction void.

The BR may intervene in the foreign exchange market through options to increase or reduce international reserves and control exchange rate volatility.

The general terms and conditions of auctions are announced in an invitation to bid on the immediately preceding business day. Options may be exercised only when the option exercise conditions established by the BR are satisfied.

(a) Options to increase or reduce international reserves:
The BR may auction put options to increase international reserves. The BR announces the total amount of the auction in the invitation to bid. The total amount of call option auctions is US$500 million. The regulations establish that call option auctions to reduce international reserves are held when the RMR is above its moving average for the preceding 20 business days plus a percentage (%) determined by the BR. The call option to reduce international reserves has been discontinued since May 27, 2016.

Effective September 28, 2018, the BR Board announced a program of gradual accumulation of international reserves via monthly auctions of put options. Effective October 1, 2018, the reserve accumulation through monthly auctions of put options program began. Effective June 4, 2019, the program was suspended.

In accordance with the regulations, put options may be exercised only when the RMR is below its recent average (average for the preceding 20 business days). The amount of the auctions is announced in the invitation. The participants must pay a premium established by means of the uniform price auction mechanism. The exercise price for options is the RMR in effect on the day the option is exercised. Entities that comply with the provisions of Regulatory Circular DODM 143 participated in this program.

(b) Options to control exchange rate volatility:
The regulations established that the BR will announce and hold a put or call option auction to control volatility when the RMR is 4% or more below or above its moving average for the preceding 20 business days. This instrument is discontinued.
(2) Purchase or sale of foreign exchange:
The BR may buy and sell US dollars directly in auctions or through other systems and mechanisms established for interbank foreign exchange operations. May be conducted with banks, financial corporations, finance companies, and financial cooperatives (provided they are authorized as EMIs by the SFC), Financiera de Desarrollo Nacional S.A., and Banco de Comercio Exterior (BANCOLDEX). Stock brokerages whose capital equals the minimum amount required for the establishment of a financial corporation and the State-Ministry of Finance and Public Credit may also participate.

The BR buys and sells dollars in uniform price auctions. The BR announces the total amount of the auctions to agents. Participants offer the exchange rate (bid price expressed in pesos per dollar) at which they would be prepared to sell or buy dollars to or from the BR, as well as the amount in dollars. Each agent may submit only one bid, which may be altered in the first three minutes of the auction. The BR reserves the right to approve an auction to buy or sell dollars below the announced amount or to declare the auction void.

Foreign exchange trading systems must grant access to the BR on special terms when it intervenes to implement exchange policy. These terms must be defined in the regulations governing the operation of such systems.

(3) Foreign exchange swap contracts:
The BR may also intervene through foreign exchange swap contracts, under which a spot sale of dollars and a forward purchase of dollars in the amount traded are transacted simultaneously.

The swap contracts are offered through auctions (uniform price) or over the counter. The auction may be held with the same entities authorized for option auctions, with the exception of stock brokers, whereas only foreign exchange clearing and settlement systems may participate in OTC transactions. In the auction, participants offer the exchange rate (bid price expressed in pesos per US dollar) at which they would be willing to sell dollars to the BR on the maturity of the operation, as well as the amount in dollars to be exchanged. They may submit as many bids as they wish for a total not to exceed the total amount of the auction.

The BR will announce the total amount of the auction. They may be conducted at 30, 60, 90, 180, or 365 calendar days. They are forward delivery transactions. Spot dollar sales are carried out on the day of the auction, and forward dollar purchases on the maturity date of the foreign exchange swap contract.

OTC participants offer the amount in dollars to be exchanged. Ten minutes prior to the OTC operation, the BR announces the initial and forward exchange rates.

- EMIs may carry out transactions in commodity derivatives with authorized foreign agents and contract commodity derivatives denominated in foreign currencies with residents and with other EMIs. Previously, EMIs may only carry out transactions in exchange rate, interest rate, and stock index financial derivatives with authorized foreign agents with which they have signed a framework contract or with any other resident or EMI.

The stock brokerage companies referred to in Article 8(3) of R.E. 1/2018 (EMIs) may offer their clients foreign exchange rate derivatives only when they are cleared and settled through a central counterparty clearinghouse authorized by the SFC.

Effective May 25, 2018, residents (other than the EMIs specified in Article 8(1) of R.E. 1/2018) may carry out transactions in financial derivatives on any type of underlying asset with authorized foreign agents that have carried out financial derivatives transactions in the immediately preceding calendar year amounting to more than US$1 billion or with the EMIs specified in Article 8(1) of R.E. 1/2018. Previously, residents may carry out transactions only in exchange rate, interest rate, and stock index financial derivatives with authorized foreign agents.

The BR also authorizes residents (other than EMIs) to carry out commodity-price derivatives transactions in foreign currency, provided they are carried out with authorized foreign agents.

Effective January 1, 2019, entities supervised by the SF may enter into credit derivatives with authorized foreign agents exclusively in the form of credit default swaps (CDS). These instruments are no longer restricted to portfolio hedging, do not require the prior authorization of the SF, but must be issued by foreign issuers.

Previously, entities supervised by the SF were permitted to conduct CDS only with authorized foreign agents with an investment grade credit rating and subject to regulatory restrictions, provided the operations are carried out solely for hedging its 2008 portfolio and have the prior authorization of the SF.
The BR has not participated in the foreign exchange derivatives market although one of the authorized foreign exchange intervention mechanisms is the foreign exchange swap.

3. Operations carried out in their capacity as local suppliers of foreign currency liquidity to foreign exchange clearing and settlement systems, in accordance with system operating rules. These operations must have a shorter term than the financing obtained.

This financing is subject to the deposit requirement indicated in Article 47 of R.E. 1/2018, with some exceptions.

Financial institutions supervised by the SF that wish to directly make or increase their capital investments in financial institutions, the securities market, insurance and reinsurance companies, and branches and agencies domiciled abroad must obtain prior authorization from the SF. Such authorization is also required if they intend to make such investments indirectly through their affiliates and subsidiaries abroad, provided the investment is made through one or more transactions within a period of one year and in compliance with any of the materiality criteria indicated in the regulation, namely: (1) the initial investment is no less than 10% of the subscribed and paid-up capital of the entity making the investment and the increase in the investment is no less than 5% of the subscribed and paid-up capital of the entity making the investment. For purposes of calculating the initial investment, it will be understood that, in addition to the first operation, the initial investment will include the investment increases made within the 12 months following the first operation; and (2) the financial supervisor in the location where the investment is to be made does not have a memorandum of understanding (MoU) with the SF. Capital investments or increases that do not meet the above criteria must be reported to the SF before the operation is carried out.

2. negative exchange risk indicator (IRC−) (sum in dollars of proprietary positions per currency that are less than zero); the three-business-day average of the IRC− may not be less than 40% of capital; and
3. short-term exposure indicators.

The “Individual Short-Term Exposure Indicator” (the sum of (1) the EMI’s net surpluses per currency, adjusted by a foreign exchange haircut, and (2) the EMI’s net shortfalls per currency; net surpluses or shortfalls per currency are the difference between liquid assets per currency and net liquidity requirements per currency) will be calculated for periods of 7 and 30 calendar days and must be greater than zero.

The “Consolidated Short-Term Exposure Indicator” (the sum of (1) the EMI’s “Individual Short-Term Exposure Indicator,” considering significant currencies at the consolidated level, and (2) the Individual Short-Term Exposure Indicators calculated by country, where their affiliates are established, provided they are less than zero) will be calculated for a period of 30 calendar days and must be greater than zero.

- Exchange measures imposed for security reasons: No.
- In accordance with IMF Executive Board Decision No. 144-(52/51): No.
- Other security restrictions: No.

The IMF staff report for the 2015 Article IV Consultation with the DRC states that, as of August 17, 2015, the DRC maintained measures that give rise to one exchange rate restriction and one MCP subject to IMF approval. The exchange restriction involves an outstanding net debt position against other contracting members under the inoperative regional payments agreement with the CEPGL. The MCP relates to a fixed exchange rate provided for in a bilateral payments agreement with Zimbabwe. (Country Report No. 15/280)

Exchange Arrangement

- Currency: Yes. The currency of the DRC is the Congo franc.

The BCC intervenes through an auction, which is the only operational framework for the BCC’s transactions with the market. Since January 2018, the exchange rate has stabilized within a 2%... band against the US dollar. Accordingly, the de facto exchange rate arrangement was reclassified to stabilized from other managed, effective January 3, 2018. Information on foreign exchange market interventions is published on the Internet in the BCC bulletin.

sold and not later than the end of the validity period of the EB declaration form. As the sales progress, the exporter is required to receive a consignment accounting statement along with the relevant payment when the exporter must repatriate the proceeds. For companies holding mineral rights, export receipts from mining products must be received in the primary foreign account within 45 calendar days of the date the goods exited the national territory, for an African country, and from shipment from an African country, unless the sales contract includes special provisions governing the payment period. Mineral rights holders are authorized to keep, effective March 28, 2018, 40% (previously 60%) of export receipts in the primary account. Only mineral rights holders that have provided the bank references and regularly report activity in the primary account to the BCC may keep a portion of export or pre-financing receipts abroad. The 60% of export receipts required to be repatriated must be deposited to an account opened with the intervening bank within 15 days of the deposit of funds in the primary foreign account. The repatriated portion of export receipts must be used to cover domestic expenses payable to residents and may not be used to finance imports or any other international payment.

Accounts opened with the national banking system must also be credited with pre-financing and miscellaneous resources and obligations related to the firm’s operations. Every mineral rights holder is required to transmit to the CB, no later than the 15th day of each month, a declaration indicating the previous month’s activity in its principal foreign account together with the corresponding bank statement. The BCC reserves the right to verify the propriety of the transaction recorded in the primary foreign accounting of a mineral rights holder, after providing written notice to the account holder in advance. To that end, the mineral rights holder must be required to acknowledge receipt and provide the BCC with a notarized letter to its banker authorizing verification of the transactions in its primary account within 30 days of receipt of the BCC correspondence.

For petroleum production companies, export receipts from petroleum products must be received in the primary foreign account within 45 calendar days of the date the goods exited the national territory, for an African country, and of shipment from an African country, unless the sales contract includes special provisions governing the payment. Every petroleum exploration and production company must be required to transmit to the CB, no later than the 15th day of each month, a declaration indicating the previous month’s activity in its principal foreign account together with the corresponding bank statement. The BCC reserves the right to verify the propriety of the transaction recorded in the primary foreign accounting of a petroleum exploration and production company, after providing written notice to the account holder in advance. To that end, the petroleum exploration and production company must be required to acknowledge receipt and provide the BCC with a notarized letter to its banker authorizing verification of the transactions in its primary account within 30 days of receipt of the CB.

Exporters are not required to surrender their export proceeds to banks or to the BCC. If they do surrender them, the terms, conditions, and arrangements must be agreed to by the bank and its customers.

If that condition is not met, a declaration must be signed for each customer and for each destination. Conventional peg
Yes. The exchange rate arrangement of the CEMAC is a conventional peg. The Republic of Congo participates in the CEMAC and has no separate legal tender. The Monetary Cooperation Agreement (MCA) between CEMAC member countries and France is based on three principles: (1) a common CB; (2) fixed parity with the euro; and (3) an unlimited convertibility guarantee. Article 16 empowers the finance ministers of signatory countries (Joint Monetary Committee) to amend the MCA. Article 17 permits signatories to amend the agreement. Article 18 specifies that the expulsion of a member country from the BEAC automatically results in that country’s renunciation of the MCA.

Official exchange rate

Yes. The CFA franc is officially pegged to the euro, the intervention currency, at a fixed rate of CFA 655.957 per euro. The exchange rate is fixed by Article 12 of the MCA of November 23, 1972, between the BEAC and France, which states that the par value may be modified following consultation among the signatory countries (BEAC members and France), taking into account the demands of the economic and financial situation of the member countries. Exchange transactions in euros between the BEAC and commercial banks are made at this rate. Buying and selling rates for certain other foreign currencies are also listed officially based on the fixed rate for the euro and the rates for these foreign currencies prevailing in the Paris foreign exchange market. The official rate is used for accounting and valuation.

| Yes. | Transfers of funds with the rest of the world are subject to transfer fees determined freely by the market but not exceeding 0.5%, excluding the turnover tax (TCA) and any other special tax. This ceiling is set at 1% in the Republic of Congo. Licensed intermediaries may effect transfers with the rest of the world through the BEAC. Within the CEMAC, transfers of funds are subject to transfer fees determined freely by the market and not exceeding 0.25%, excluding the TCA and any other special tax. |

Foreign exchange standing facility

| Yes. | Within the limits of available stocks, the BEAC’s OTC exchange transactions are conducted exclusively with national public accountants and treasuries. |
There are no restrictions on interbank foreign exchange transactions within the CEMAC. Exchange transactions are OTC transactions. The BEAC does not intervene in exchange transactions within the CEMAC. These transactions are freely conducted by operators licensed by the MOF with the approval of the Central African Banking Commission (COBAC).

A fee of no more than 4% for CFA franc area notes and 10% for other currencies, not including the TCA and any other specific tax, is collected by licensed intermediaries on transactions in foreign banknotes and traveler’s checks. This fee covers all charges on OTC transactions and the intermediation margin.

Foreign exchange transactions are conducted on an OTC basis.

There is no forward foreign exchange market in the CEMAC. Licensed intermediaries may enter into forward exchange contracts up to a limit of CFAF 100 million on presentation of supporting documentation (invoices, debt repayment schedules, or other foreign-currency-denominated debt instruments) and must report such activities to the BEAC. For amounts over CFAF 100 million, requests for forward exchange contracts must be made to the BEAC so that their purpose may be verified.

Arrangements for Payments and Receipts

Within the CEMAC, the CFA franc is used freely for payments and receipts relating to current and capital transactions and payments. Settlements with all countries other than CEMAC members must be made through correspondent banks in one of the currencies of the two parties or in any other currency agreed on by the two parties to the transaction.

The monetary unit is the CFA franc, which is the sole official currency and legal tender in all CEMAC member countries. Consequently, transactions among residents must be settled in domestic currency.
Payments arrangements  Yes.

Bilateral payments arrangements  No.

Operative  No.

Inoperative  No.

Regional arrangements  Yes. An operations account links all the countries with the French Treasury. All purchases and sales of foreign currencies and euros in exchange for CFA francs are ultimately settled by a debit or credit to the operations account. Governments may maintain foreign currency deposits related to oil reserves at commercial banks and use them to meet their external debt service obligations. Exchange regulations in the CEMAC member countries are harmonized.

Clearing agreements  No.

Barter agreements and open accounts  Yes. In the Republic of Congo, under production-sharing and investment contracts, clearing accounts used to make import payments from export receipts are held abroad under the control of MOF and BEAC departments.

Administration of control  Yes. Administration of the foreign exchange regulations is the responsibility of the MOFs of the CEMAC countries, which may delegate all or a portion of their authority to the BEAC, the COBAC, and licensed intermediaries. For example, authority is delegated to licensed intermediaries to carry out transactions with the rest of the world. They must verify the validity of transactions, collect statistics, and report these activities to the monetary authorities. However, certain types of transactions may not be delegated. The BEAC supervises the exchange regulations; evaluates foreign exchange hedging operations; reviews requests for approval of opening of foreign exchange accounts by some resident legal entities; and monitors the repatriation of export proceeds. The COBAC ensures that licensed intermediaries comply with certain provisions of these regulations, especially to prevent weakening of the CEMAC banking system.

Payments arrears  No. Licensed intermediaries may freely execute their customers’ payment orders. The related transfers may, at their request, be made through the BEAC. In this context, the MCA with France serves to guarantee the convertibility of the CFA franc. No payment arrears are allowed on the grounds that insufficient foreign exchange is available.

Official  No.

Private  No.

Controls on trade in gold (coins and/or bullion)  Yes.

- On domestic ownership and/or trade  Yes. CEMAC residents are free to hold, purchase, and sell gold in any form within the CEMAC.
- On external trade  Yes. Except in the case of manufactured articles containing small quantities of gold, CEMAC gold imports and exports are subject to approval by the appropriate authorities. The national treasuries and the BEAC are exempt from this requirement.

Controls on exports and imports of banknotes  Yes. Residents and nonresidents traveling from one country to another within the CEMAC may take with them an unlimited amount of CEMAC banknotes and coins.

- On exports  Yes. CFA francs issued by the BEAC may not be exported to countries... outside the CEMAC. However, departing resident travelers may have in their possession up to CFAF 100,000. During their trips outside the CEMAC, travelers must use payment instruments other than BEAC banknotes (foreign currency, traveler’s checks, bank drafts, transfers, etc.).

Foreign currency

Yes. Resident and nonresident travelers crossing CEMAC borders must, on exit, declare any foreign currency, securities, or instruments valued at more than CFAF 1 million to the customs authorities. Nonresident travelers leaving the CEMAC may take with them foreign currency valued at up to the amount they declared on entering the CEMAC. If they made no declaration on entry or if they are carrying sums exceeding those they brought into the CEMAC, they must explain the source of the amount in excess of CFAF 1 million. Supporting documents include pay slips and work permits (wage income), student cards (parental assistance for students and trainees), and notarized instruments (donations), among others.

---

On imports

Domestic currency

Foreign currency

No. Resident and nonresident travelers crossing CEMAC borders must, on entry, declare foreign currency, securities, or instruments valued at more than CFAF 1 million to the customs authorities.

Approval required

Yes. The MOF may allow certain resident legal entities to open foreign exchange accounts with BEAC consent. These accounts may not be credited with CFA francs or with debits from CFA franc accounts.

Held abroad

No. The principle underlying the CEMAC is the centralization of reserves at the BEAC. Consequently, foreign currency acquired by residents in transactions with the rest of the world must be systematically repatriated and surrendered to the BEAC. Thus, only licensed intermediaries may maintain foreign exchange accounts with their correspondent banks abroad to meet their cash flow needs.

Approval required

n.r. There are no specific regulations on foreign exchange accounts held by CEMAC residents with banks abroad. However, transactions with the rest of the world involving amounts exceeding CFAF 5 million must be settled by licensed intermediaries.

The exchange regulations, including the section on capital flows within the CEMAC, do not apply to transactions between CEMAC member countries. There are no restrictions on most capital flows between CEMAC and non-CEMAC countries, provided they comply with the laws and regulations prohibiting drug financing and trafficking. Certain loans, direct investments, and the issuance, advertisement, and sale of foreign securities within the CEMAC are subject to administrative controls and require approval from the appropriate authorities. Controls on these transactions are applied indiscriminately to countries in the CFA franc area, other than CEMAC member countries, and all non-CFA franc area countries. Moreover, Article 61 of the General Regulations of the Central African Financial Market Supervisory Commission (COSUMAF), which went into effect January 15, 2009, specifies that “when a nonresident legal entity plans a public offering on the Central African regional financial market, it must prepare a disclosure document and submit it to COSUMAF for approval prior to dissemination. The prior approval of the exchange control authority in the various countries concerned must also be obtained.” The article also states that “the issuer must appoint a correspondent (securities dealer) established in a CEMAC member state, where it elects domicile. This correspondent must be responsible for: (1) receiving correspondence from COSUMAF and (2) forwarding to COSUMAF all documents and information required under the laws and regulations or requested by COSUMAF.”

February 2, 2015, under Article 5 of the legal act adopted during session 5677-2015 of the Board of Directors of the BCCR held January 30, 2015. Under this arrangement: (1) the BCCR allows the exchange rate to be freely determined by foreign currency supply and demand, but it may participate in the market to meet its own foreign currency requirements and those of the nonbank public sector (NBPS) and, at its discretion, to prevent drastic fluctuations in the exchange rate, in such a way that these actions will not interrupt the trend determined by the macroeconomic variables of that price (sterilization interventions); (2) the BCCR may carry out direct operations or use foreign currency trading instruments that it deems appropriate, in accordance with current regulations.

Three episodes are identified in the exchange market throughout 2018. First, relative stability was observed in the first half of the year, a period during which a cumulative change of $-0.48\%$ and a year-on-year change of $-0.98\%$ were recorded at end-December 2017, where the net supply of foreign exchange by the private sector made it possible to meet the Sector Público No Bancario (SPNB) requirements.

Exchange tensions arose between July and November as a result of various factors: (1) a private market with a seasonally lower surplus; (2) the change in the position of the government, which switched from being a supplier to a net demander of foreign exchange; (3) higher oil prices (until October); (4) the fiscal uncertainty, which increased economic operators’ preference for savings instruments in foreign currency and for credits in domestic currency; and (5) the resulting increase in the exchange rate and exchange expectations, which accelerated the predilection for savings in dollars and credits in colones, intensifying the above effects.

The CB intervened with currency sales to avoid wild fluctuations in the exchange rate and to meet the SPNB requirements. Between July and November, the net cumulative result of private-sector operations (“windows”) was a deficit of US$6 million (surplus of US$928.9 million in the first half). At November, the CB’s currency sale amassed US$415.5 million for stabilization and US$1,224,200,000 for SPNB operations.

This situation changed in December. The exchange rate pressures diminished and the “windows” of foreign exchange dealers amassed a surplus of US$65.6 million, exchange variation expectations adjusted downward, and the CB was able to replenish in Monex some of the foreign currency sold to the SPNB in previous months.

The latter, connected to the currency sale through the MOF, allowed for the reduction of the foreign exchange shortfall for operations with the SPNB from US$1,224,200,000 at November 30 to US$322.1 million at end-2018. The MOF sold to the CB some of the resources from the placement of internal debt (including placement contracts), external credit disbursements, and other foreign exchange income, most of which was received in December. As a result of all of these movements, the Monex average exchange rate posted a year-on-year change of 6.9\% (2.5\% in 2017).

Contrary to what was observed in the second half of 2018, there were no stress events in the exchange market in the first half of 2019. During this period, foreign exchange dealers’ operations with the public (“windows”) posted a cumulative surplus of US$812 million that, while lower than that which was posted at the same time the year before (US$928 million), enabled the CB to meet the SPNB foreign exchange requirements and partially replenish the currency sold to that end in previous periods. That surplus was particularly high for the second quarter (higher than that recorded during the same period in previous years), enabling authorized foreign exchange dealers to increase their foreign exchange position (FXP) by US$180.2 million in the second quarter and US$256 million in the first half of the year.

The increased availability of foreign currency was reflected in greater exchange rate stability (in relation to the second half of 2018), tending downward. The average exchange rate in the foreign currency market (Monex) exhibited a cumulative change of −6.48% and a year-on-year change of 0.33% at July 31, while for the same period in 2018, these benchmarks were −1.07% and −0.35%, respectively.

Between January 2 and July 31, 2019, the BCCR sold a net amount of US$65.5 million for stabilization purposes, which is close to the amount posted one year earlier (US$73.8 million).

The BCCR publishes its intervention data on a daily basis right after the Monex trading session closes. Given the increased volatility and departure from the 2% band against the US dollar in end-August 2018, the de facto exchange rate arrangement was reclassified to “floating” from “crawl-like,” effective August 21, 2018.

Costa Rica does not have an official exchange rate; however, for the liquidation of instruments, contracts, and obligations denominated in foreign currency, Article 48 of the Organic Law of the BCCR provides that the latter, at its option, may be paid in colones at an amount equivalent to the actual market value. The actual market value is determined by using the buying and selling benchmark exchange rate, which is calculated daily by the BCCR pursuant to Article 9 of the Regulation on Spot Exchange Operations (ROCC).

These regulations define the calculation of the buying and selling benchmark exchange rate every day, based on the information that all entities authorized to operate in the foreign exchange market submit to the BCCR. The benchmark exchange rates are calculated as follows pursuant to Article 9 of the ROCC: The benchmark exchange rates (buying and selling) for day $t$ are the average (weighted by amount) of the exchange rates of the foreign currency (buying and selling) transactions between foreign exchange dealers and the public on day $t-1$, during a window of time determined by the Board of Directors of the BCCR.

The Board of Directors of the BCCR, under Article 5 of the legal act adopted during session 5813-2018 of January 31, 2018, effective February 1, 2018, approved the adoption of an inflation-targeting framework. This agreement was the culmination of the transition process that began in 2005, the objective of which is to ensure low and stable inflation in Costa Rica.

In the context of the 2019–2020 macroeconomic program, the BCCR upheld the institutional commitment to the domestic stability of the colón embodied in an inflation target of 3%, with a tolerance range of ±1 percentage point (pp).

Exchange tax  Yes.  In accordance with Article 97 of the Organic Law of the Central Bank of Costa Rica (LOBCCR) and Article 5 of the ROCC, foreign exchange dealers are charged a participation fee equivalent to 25% of the foreign exchange dealing spread on all their foreign exchange operations.

Exchange subsidy  No.

Foreign exchange market  Yes.  Article 2 of the ROCC authorizes the BCCR, financial institutions supervised by the General Superintendency of Financial Entities (SUGEF), stock brokers, and exchange houses to participate in the exchange market on their own account and at their own risk. Foreign exchange dealers may set exchange rates for their operations with the public and consequently the effective exchange margin is determined by the market.

Spot exchange market  Yes.  For the purchase and sale of currencies, the foreign exchange market has: platforms for the trading of foreign exchange by dealers with the general public (including both physical and electronic windows, automated teller machines (ATMs), and Internet banking), the foreign currency market (Monex), and operations between foreign exchange dealers outside Monex.

Monex is a foreign exchange market organized and operated through an electronic platform of the BCCR. Participants in the market include foreign exchange dealers, the BCCR, and nondealers (individuals and legal entities).

Outside Monex, foreign exchange dealers may engage in foreign exchange transactions among themselves by means of transfers. As of December 31, 2018, foreign exchange dealers authorized to engage in foreign exchange operations with the public (pursuant to Article 2 of the ROCC) consisted of 14 commercial banks, 2 exchange bureaus, 8 credit and savings unions, 4 financial enterprises, 2 mutual savings and loan associations, and 7 brokerage firms.

For exchange houses, Chapter VI of the ROCC (Article 15) states that: “Exchange houses may make spot foreign exchange purchases and sales in notes, bank drafts, checks, transfers to and from other countries, and other payment instruments, on their own behalf and at their own risk.” Currently, their only operations in Costa Rica are foreign exchange swaps.

Operated by the central bank  Yes.  According to the foreign currency management strategy for the NBPS, the BCCR has the ability to: (1) directly meet the net daily foreign currency requirements by drawing on its international reserves; and (2) replenish the foreign currency used to meet the net requirements of the NBPS through participation in Monex on the basis of the prevailing conditions in the foreign exchange market.

Pursuant to Article 2 of the ROCC, the Board of Directors of the BCCR is the body entrusted with authorizing entities to act as intermediaries in the foreign exchange market. Financial intermediaries supervised by the SUGEF are authorized to carry out foreign exchange intermediation operations and, by extension, to participate in Monex.

Foreign exchange dealers may set the buying and selling exchange rate for their operations with the public and, as a result, the effective foreign exchange margin is determined by the market. The BCCR does not establish limits on fees for foreign exchange dealing charged by foreign exchange dealers, or on the effective margin.

As of December 31, 2018, foreign exchange dealers authorized to engage in foreign exchange operations with the public (pursuant to Article 2 of the ROCC) consisted of 14 commercial banks, 2 exchange bureaus, 8 credit and savings unions, 4 financial enterprises, 2 mutual savings and loan associations, and 7 brokerage firms.

In Monex, foreign exchange dealers may freely publish the exchange rates at which they buy and sell dollars. Effective June 1, 2018, as approved by the Bank’s Board of Directors through Article 6 of the legal act adopted in session 5825-2018, held May 2, 2018, exchange dealers must pay a fee of 0.05% on the amount traded.

The BCCR trades in foreign currency in Monex directly like any other participant, but does not do so in the form of market makers. It does so to prevent undue fluctuations in the exchange rate and to meet its own needs (Article 87 of the Organic Law of the BCCR) as well as to meet the foreign currency requirements of the NBPS (Article 89 of the Organic Law of the BCCR).

In addition to Monex, foreign exchange dealers may engage in foreign exchange transactions among themselves (outside of Monex) by means of transfers.

Foreign exchange dealers may offer buying and selling rates to other participants in the Monex. The role of market makers is not taken into consideration in the Costa Rican exchange regulations.

The regulations governing foreign exchange derivatives make it possible to engage in hedging transactions by means of forwards, futures, and swaps. As of December 31, 2018, five banking entities undertake operations with foreign exchange derivatives.

The derivative instruments used are delivery forwards and financial forwards, in addition to “contracts for difference.” The settlement periods for such operations are in the range of 2 to 180 days at present (the Regulation governing Operations in Foreign Exchange Derivatives permits a maximum on one year).

The BCCR does not participate in the foreign exchange derivatives market; however, to ensure compliance with the limit established for the daily change in the foreign currency position of foreign exchange dealers, foreign exchange dealers are subject to a limit of 2% on the amount traded in foreign exchange derivatives.

Arrangements for Payments and Receipts

Prescription of currency requirements No. Pursuant to Law No. 7558, Article 42, the colón is the national currency and legal tender. Pursuant to Article 48 of the same law, acts, contracts, and obligations in foreign currency are valid, effective, and executable but may be paid, at the debtor’s election, in colones, based on the actual exchange value of the currency in question on the date of payment. There are no international treaties or conventions that limit or restrict the use of domestic or foreign currency in making or receiving payments.

The Sistema Nacional de Pagos Electrónicos (SINPE) was created on the basis of Law No. 7558 of the BCCR to offer a secure and efficient payment system. Services for administering and managing funds and securities were implemented on the platform. Funds are moved to customers through collection services, such as direct debits and real-time debits, and through payment services, such as immediate transfers, direct credits, and SINPE Mobile.

Services are offered through the SINPE platform via financial entities, which offer them to their customers, in accordance with the rules and standards established by the BCCR.

This treaty aims to promote legal certainty, the development and strengthening of payments and securities settlement systems of systemic importance in Central America and the Dominican Republic, and stronger CB control over payment systems.

Outward payments (PEX): The SINPE facility was used to establish an interconnection with the payments system for Central America and the Dominican Republic (SIP) so as to offer customers the possibility of sending and receiving funds within the region.

In addition, the new version of the Payments System Regulation makes it possible to include regional partners, which will enable them to access funds mobilization services for third parties using the same SINPE platform.

The exchange market regulations are the responsibility of the BCCR. Financial intermediaries authorized to participate as foreign exchange dealers and foreign exchange bureaus are supervised by the General Superintendency of Financial Entities SUGEF and stockbrokers that act as foreign exchange dealers, by the General Superintendency of Securities (SUGEVAL).

There are controls only on the gold trade for national archeological treasures.

Resident Accounts

There are no quantitative limits on transfers abroad from foreign currency accounts owned by residents. However, each financial SINPE has controls on the movement of funds; both the origin and destination of the funds must be identified for each transaction in the system.

A service was designed to help compliance officers access transactions processed through SINPE by identification number.

Exports and Export Proceeds

Repatriation requirements: No.
There is no surrender requirement. However, in Section V Temporary Instruments of the LOBCCR, Article 83 states that “when, in the opinion of the Board of Directors of the Central Bank of Costa Rica, there is a balance of payments disequilibrium which cannot be dealt with using the instruments specified in this Law, the Board of Directors may establish that any individual or legal entity that has obtained foreign exchange proceeds from exports of goods and services, must sell all or part of such foreign exchange to institutions authorized to operate on that market, within such periods of time as the Board may specify. This measure may not be established for a period of longer than 1 year.”

Section V of the Organic Law of the Central Bank (Articles 77 through 84) addresses the use of temporary policy instruments and the conditions governing their use. In particular, Article 83 indicates that, in the event that the Board of Directors of the BCCR determines that there is an imbalance in the balance of payments that cannot be redressed using the instruments designated by law, it may, as a temporary measure, oblige any individual or legal entity to sell, in part or in full, the foreign currency it has obtained through exports of goods and services. This measure may be enforced for a maximum period of one year. Since the LOBCCR was enacted in 1995, the temporary instrument established under Article 83 has not been used by the BCCR.

An export declaration must be filed with the Foreign Trade Promotion Agency (PROCOMER).

The TICA system at the General Directorate of Customs specifies for each export product the requirements (technical notes) established by the Ministries of Health, Agriculture and Livestock, Public Security, the Ministry of Environment, Energy, and Technology, and the National Seeds Office, etc.

Taxes are levied on bananas, coffee, and cattle. There are no taxes on exports of nontraditional products to countries outside Central America.

Provisions Specific to the Financial Sector

Provisions specific to commercial banks and other credit institutions

Paragraphs (h), (i), and (j) of Article 49 of the Organic Law of the Central Bank state that debt instruments or securities, foreign currency deposits, and loans disbursed in foreign currency may be agreed to and must be paid in foreign currency, all corresponding to entities subject to oversight by SUGEF.

The Organic Law of the Central Bank, Article 86, states that only the CB, institutions supervised by SUGEF, and other institutions authorized by the CB may deal in foreign exchange. The latter two categories must meet a series of requirements established in the article.

The Organic Law of the Central Bank, Article 88, authorizes the CB to regulate the limits on own-account operations by supervised institutions, with respect to their transactions in foreign currencies.

The Organic Law of the Central Bank, Article 90, authorizes the CB to regulate forward or futures transactions and other similar transactions in foreign currencies.

The ROCC regulates foreign exchange dealing by authorized institutions as provided under the Organic Law of the Central Bank.

The regulations governing operations in foreign exchange derivatives regulate operations in foreign exchange derivatives by institutions supervised by SUGEF, SUGEVAL, and SUPEN (Superintendency of Pensions).

The Organic Law of the National Banking System (LOSBN), in Article 3(1), establishes collaboration in the execution of monetary, exchange, credit, and bank policy as a core banking function.

Article 75 of the LOSBN stipulates that “All operations carried out in foreign currency by commercial banks, as well assets and liabilities held abroad in foreign currency, are subject to the provisions of the Organic Law of the Central Bank of Costa Rica and to the attendant resolutions and recommendations approved by the Board of Directors of the Central Bank.”

Borrowing abroad Yes. Commercial banks and financial institutions supervised by the SUGEF must inform the BCCR in advance when contracting credit abroad. Credit and savings unions are required to obtain BCCR approval to execute these operations.

Maintenance of accounts abroad No. Article 75 of the LOSBN stipulates that “All operations carried out in foreign currency by commercial banks, as well assets and liabilities held abroad in foreign currency, are subject to the provisions of the Organic Law of the Central Bank of Costa Rica and to the attendant resolutions and recommendations approved by the Board of Directors of the Central Bank.” This Article allows the CB to establish controls on the maintenance of accounts abroad; however, in practice, this authority has never been exercised and commercial banks may maintain accounts abroad without any type of controls.

Lending to nonresidents (financial or commercial credits) Yes. Article 74 of the LOSBN stipulates that “Commercial banks may carry out all operations in foreign currency that, in accordance with relevant bank practices and technical principles.” Law No. 8204 on narcotics, psychotropic substances, unauthorized drugs, related activities, money laundering, and the financing of terrorism and SUGEF Agreement 12-10 “Implementing Regulations for Law 8204” state that financial entities must maintain detailed information on their customers (know-your-customer policy), including those to whom they have extended credit.
In practice, there are no specific requirements for lending to nonresidents.

Articles 74 and 75 of the Organic Law of the National Banking System state that financial intermediaries may issue loans in foreign currency.

Law No. 8204 on narcotics, psychotropic substances, unauthorized drugs, related activities, money laundering, and the financing of terrorism and SUGEF Agreement 1210 “Implementing Regulations for Law No. 8204” state that financial entities must maintain detailed information on their customers (know-your-customer policy), including those to whom they have extended credit.

However, the Borrower Rating Regulation (SUGEF Agreement 105) requires financial entities that extend credit in foreign currency to borrowers who do not generate foreign exchange to perform an additional generic estimate. There are no specific requirements for entities’ credit operations with nonresidents. Chapter III of the Macropudential Policy Database document contains further details.

Paragraph (i) of Article 49 of the LOBCCR establishes, from November 3, 1995, that “…the following may be agreed to in foreign currency and, in such cases, shall be paid in the said currency: (i) foreign currency deposits with entities subject to oversight by the General Superintendency of Financial Entities.”

Article 75 of the Organic Law of the National Banking System states that: “Commercial banks may carry out all operations involving foreign exchange, which, in accordance with the applicable banking practices and technical principles, are usually carried out by such institutions, provided they were authorized in accordance with the Organic Law of the Central Bank to act as agents and for the account of the Central Bank in the corresponding operations and business activities.”

account customer risk classifications. Pursuant to Article 16 of Law No. 8204, financial institutions must require the following:

Maintenance of registered accounts – they may not maintain anonymous accounts, encrypted accounts, or accounts under fictitious or imprecise names.

In the case of legal entities classified as risky according to the parameters established by the National Council of Supervision of the Financial System, financial institutions must require that the legal and nonlegal representatives of a company be notarized. This must be verified especially when commercial relationships are established, in particular the opening of new accounts, the issuance of deposit passbooks, the creation of trust transactions, the rental of safe deposit boxes, or the execution of transactions, including inward or outward transfers in domestic or foreign currency, in amounts equal to or greater than US$10,000 or its equivalent in other currencies.

The purpose of these regulations is to prevent money laundering and the financing of terrorism, which is why they do not relate to exchange rate controls.

Reserve requirements Yes. Effective June 16, 2019, paragraph (C) of Title III of the Monetary Policy Regulations established a minimum reserve requirement differentiated for deposits and liabilities according to currency. The minimum reserve requirement for deposits and liabilities denominated in domestic currency is 12%, while the minimum reserve for deposits and liabilities denominated in foreign currency is 15%. Previously, the reserve requirement was 15% for both foreign and domestic currency. Minimum reserve requirements differentiated by nature of deposit-taking instruments are not considered, nor are ones differentiated by origin of resources, whether from residents or nonresidents.

Liquid asset requirements No.

Interest rate controls No.

Credit controls No.

Investment regulations No.

Abroad by banks No.

In banks by nonresidents No.

Open foreign exchange position limits Yes. The FXP as a proportion of core capital must be within the range of ±100%.

The average monthly ratio of the FXP to core capital expressed in dollars must be equal to the value defined by the institution as desirable, with no objection by the BCCR management. The tolerance range for compliance with the monthly average of this indicator is between −3 pp and +1 pp of the ratio.

The daily change in the FXP ratio to core capital for foreign exchange operations may not exceed ±2% of the value of core capital expressed in US dollars.

The National Financial System Supervision Council (CONASSIF), pursuant to Article 10 of the legal act adopted during session 1340-2017 of June 13, 2017, approved specific rules for financial intermediaries to improve their management of market, interest rate, and exchange rate risk in a manner that is consistent with their risk profile, systemic importance, and macroeconomic conditions.

The agreement is based on the fact that a neutral FXP protects the financial intermediary’s income statement from fluctuations in the exchange rate, but not necessarily its capital adequacy ratio; therefore, it was requested that:
quantitative restrictions be determined for the FXP for “trading” and “nontrading” transactions.
The formula for calculating the capital adequacy indicator was changed, in particular the capital requirement component associated with exchange risk, such that greater exposure to exchange risk results in higher capital requirements.

On resident assets and liabilities  Yes.  There are no absolute limits on open positions in foreign exchange. However, changes in these positions are subject to the conditions indicated in Article 4 of the Regulations for Exchange Operations. There are limits on changes in the foreign currency positions of foreign exchange dealers; however, no distinction is made between resident and nonresident positions.

On nonresident assets and liabilities  Yes.  There are no absolute limits on open positions in foreign exchange. However, there are limits on the FXP with respect to capital, average monthly capital levels, and daily changes in capital, subject to the provisions of Article 4 of the ROCC.

Provisions specific to institutional investors  Yes.  On February 7, 2014, amendments were made to Agreement SGV-A-61 requiring entities to communicate relevant information to the markets and to Agreement SGV-A-75 relating to periodic reporting of information.

Insurance companies  Yes.  Article 25 of the Regulations on the Solvency of Insurers and Reinsurers only sets forth general principles regarding investment policies.

Specific provisions for the investments backing the technical reserves of insurance companies are set out in Article 23 of the Regulations on the Solvency of Insurers and Reinsurers. Although at least 40% of these securities must be instruments meeting the requirements of Article 27 of this chapter, for example, having at least one investment grade rating, investment in other types of instruments is not restricted.

The Management Body will be required to justify the use of the currencies, demonstrating that aspects such as liquidity and/or traded volume were analyzed and that hedging for exchange rate risk for these currencies is possible. The foregoing is established in “Title II. Governance of Investments.” The risks stemming from the above must be reported by the Management Body, in accordance with paragraph (f) of Article 5 of this Regulation. Previously, funds' investments in foreign currency-denominated assets were limited to those denominated in US dollars, yen, euros, and pound sterling.

This also framework facilitates the implementation of decisions taken by the UNSC on the basis of a list of persons and entities drawn up by the Committee. The WAEMU’ AML regulations were first incorporated into Côte d’Ivoire’s legal corpus through a law of December 2, 2005. A National Financial Information Processing Unit (CENTIF) was created in 2006, to combat clandestine financial channels, money laundering, and the financing of terrorism. The WAEMU AFT mechanism was first incorporated into Côte d’Ivoire legal corpus through an Ordinance of November 12, 2009. The WAEMU AML/FT framework was updated through regional Directive No. 02/2015/CM/UEMOA of July 2, 2015, of the WAEMU’s Council of Ministers on combating money laundering and the financing of terrorism in the WAEMU. This current regional Directive as incorporated into Côte d’Ivoire’s Law in November 2016.

The exchange rate arrangement of the WAEMU is a conventional peg. Côte d’Ivoire participates in a currency union with seven other members of the WAEMU and has no separate legal tender. The Monetary Cooperation Agreement between the WAEMU member countries and France was concluded December 4, 1973. It was maintained after the French franc was replaced by the euro by the Council of the European Union decision of November 23, 1998. The Monetary Cooperation Agreement is based on three pillars: (1) a common issuing institution, (2) fixed parity with the euro, and (3) a guarantee of unlimited convertibility. In exchange for the unlimited convertibility of the CFA franc to euros, the WAEMU members are required to deposit 50% of their reserve holdings to the operations account with the French Treasury in accordance with the Amendment to the Operations Account Convention signed by France and the BCEAO September 20, 2005.

The CFA franc is officially pegged to the euro at the fixed exchange rate of CFAF 655.957 per euro. The exchange rates between the CFA franc and other currencies are automatically inferred based on the rates between those currencies and the euro. The Conference of Heads of State and Government may vote to modify the monetary cooperation accord between the WAMU member countries and France. Legally, the permanence of monetary cooperation accords is guaranteed by the November 23, 1998, decision of the Council of the European Union concerning exchange matters relating to the CFA franc and the Comorian franc (Decision No. 98/683/CE).

The monetary policy framework is an exchange rate anchor vis-à-vis the euro. The operational target of price stability is defined as an annual inflation rate in the WAEMU that falls within a band of ±1% around a central rate of 2%. The Harmonized Consumer Price Index (HCPI) is the benchmark rate to measure inflation.
Authorized intermediaries may freely set their exchange rates in transactions with their clients, except for the euro, which must be traded against the CFA franc at the official fixed rate of CFAF 655.957 per euro. However, they can charge a commission of up to 2% of the transaction amount.

Instruction No. 013-11-2015 on the terms and conditions for conducting rapid money transfers as a subagent within the WAEMU went into force.

The commission rate charged on transfers to all countries that are not members of the WAEMU area is 0.6%. This commission must be surrendered to the National Treasury and is a portion of its tax revenue.

Exchange subsidy

No.

Foreign exchange market

Yes.

Spot exchange market

Yes. The entities authorized to conduct nonelectronic foreign currency transactions are authorized intermediary banks and individuals or companies authorized to conduct nonelectronic transactions by decision of the minister of finance, with the consent of the BCEAO. Authorized intermediaries must comply with the provisions in effect concerning the financial conditions for engaging in nonelectronic exchange operations with euro banknotes and issue a transaction receipt for any operation with a customer. In addition, to ensure that customers have satisfactory information, authorized intermediaries must (1) post at their windows, at all times, the rates effectively applied for the various currencies and (2) post a notification that a transaction slip must be issued for all foreign exchange transactions based on the requestor’s identity document.

As of December 31, 2018, there were 27 banks and 82 exchange bureaus in Côte d’Ivoire. Exchange bureaus are dealers authorized, on the approval of the Minister of Economy and Finance (MEF), to transact in foreign exchange with the public. Exchange bureaus may conduct transactions in foreign currencies (except euros) with the CB. Registered banknote exchange houses may not make transfers or payments in foreign currencies with other countries or maintain accounts abroad.

In their transactions with customers, these authorized intermediaries (licensed intermediary banks and licensed exchange dealers) freely set the buying and selling rates for foreign currencies, with the exception of the euro, which is traded at the official fixed parity of CFAF 655.957 and may give rise to a commission of a maximum of 2.0%.

Operated by the central bank

Yes.

Foreign exchange standing facility

The BCEAO exchanges foreign currency for CFA francs at the rates published on the international markets, with the exception of the euro, which is traded at the official fixed rate of 655.957 per euro. The nonelectronic currency exchange windows are open to owners of accounts on the BCEAO books and to the general public. A commission of 0.5% is charged on all transactions with the public (purchases and sales) and all withdrawals by banks and financial institutions (including euro withdrawals). However, no commission is charged for the following operations: (1) OTC foreign banknote exchanges conducted by state entities, government employees of WAEMU members on mission abroad, and officials of the CB and their beneficiaries; and (2) payments made by banks and financial institutions.

Authorized intermediary banks are required to simultaneously cover the exchange risk they incur with respect to derivative instruments traded with their customers. The underlying commercial and financial operations must relate to imports and exports of goods and services by a resident, foreign borrowing operations by a resident (drawings and repayments), or direct foreign investment in a resident company. The CNB conducts foreign exchange auctions on a discretionary basis to ensure the stability of the kuna and provide liquidity for payments domestically and abroad (described under Section H.1.a.3. Auction). Since April 2016, the kuna has stabilized within a 2% band against the euro. Accordingly, the de facto exchange rate arrangement is classified as a stabilized arrangement. Intervention data (prices and volume) are published on the CNB website.

ADs are allowed to determine freely their bid-ask spreads and foreign exchange commissions with their clients. At end-2018, all 21 banks, one branch of a foreign bank, and 4 housing savings banks are licensed by the CNB to deal in foreign exchange with the public. In addition to banks, as of April 15, 2019, 1,256 foreign exchange bureaus were licensed by the CNB to deal in foreign exchange. Foreign exchange bureaus may be legal persons, sole traders, or craftspeople and may only buy foreign cash and checks denominated in foreign currency and sell foreign cash in exchange for kuna cash and may not engage in foreign exchange transactions with the CNB. They may buy and sell foreign cash only to natural persons—that is, they may not enter into foreign exchange transactions with legal persons, sole traders, or craftspeople. Foreign exchange bureaus must sell foreign cash surpluses (difference between foreign cash bought and sold) to the credit institution with which it entered into agreement on currency exchange operations. Foreign exchange bureaus may not maintain accounts abroad for the purpose of foreign exchange activity and may not make foreign currency payments and transfers on behalf of their clients.
The CNB occasionally intervenes by conducting foreign exchange auctions at its discretion to ensure the stability of the kuna and provide liquidity for payments domestically and abroad. Access to auctions is granted only to banks. Three auction models are in use: (1) a differentiated exchange rate model (multiple price auction)—the amount to be distributed is allocated to bidders from lowest to highest for purchases and from highest to lowest for sales; (2) a uniform exchange rate set by the CNB based on the bidders’ rates; and (3) a fixed exchange rate set by the CNB in advance. The auction is announced to the banks by the Reuters Dealing System, Bloomberg, and telephone. Banks are informed of the success or failure of their bids immediately and aggregate results are published on the CNB website the day of the auction. The minimum bid is €300,000/US$300,000.

Banks are free to set their bid-ask rates on the interbank market. All banks may participate in the interbank market. Banks quote buying and selling prices continuously, but there is no official market-making agreement. An auctioning process is described under Section H.1.a.3.

There is an OTC foreign exchange market whose participants are monetary financial institutions and other legal entities.

Banks quote buying and selling prices continuously, but there is no official market-making agreement.

The CNB does not participate in the foreign exchange derivatives market.

The CNB has provided, on occasion, swap facilities at par for banks in a limited forward market.

Controls on capital and money market instruments

Yes. Investments in capital and money market securities must be reported to the CNB for statistical purposes. Limits apply to investments by pension funds, insurance companies, and investment funds. A valid prospectus must be published before offering a security to the public or admission to a regulated market, except as prescribed by the CMA. The CMA was amended in 2015 with the Act on Amendments to CMA (Official Gazette No. 110/15) with a view to harmonization with provisions of the Directive 2013/50/EU amending Directive 2004/109/EC on the harmonization of transparency requirements in relation to information about issuers whose securities are admitted to trading on a regulated market, Directive 2003/71/EC on the prospectus to be published when securities are offered to the public or admitted to trading, and Directive 2007/14/EC laying down detailed rules for the implementation of certain provisions of Directive 2004/109/EC concerning financial reporting of an issuer of securities admitted to trading on the regulated market, administrative sanctions and measures. These regulations are also implemented in Capital Market Law No. 65/18.

On capital market securities

Yes. Pursuant to approval from the Croatian Financial Services Supervisory Agency (Hanfa), the Zagreb Stock Exchange is the market operator of the regulated market and multilateral trading facility. Trading of shares or other securities is prescribed by the CMA and rules of the stock exchange. The stock exchange manages the regulated market, which consists of the regular market, the official market, and the prime market, according to its rules. Securities may be admitted to the regular and official markets in accordance with the provisions of the CMA and Regulation (EU) No. 600/2014. Delegated Regulation (EU) No. 2017/568 and the rules of the stock exchange concerning the number of shares available to the public or the number of shares available in the near future that the stock exchange considers sufficient. Securities may be admitted to the prime market, the highest segment of the regulated market, in accordance with the rules of the stock exchange. Admission to trading must be approved by the stock exchange.

Purchase locally by nonresidents

No.

Sale or issue locally by nonresidents

Yes. Under the CMA, issuers from another EU member and third country issuers based in an EU member may make a public offering or apply for admission of securities to a regulated market in Croatia, using a prospectus previously granted by the relevant authority of the issuer’s home member country. The prospectus and its supplements approved by the relevant authority of the issuer’s home EU country are considered valid under the CMA, provided Hanfa, as the relevant authority of the issuer’s host member, and the ESMA were notified.
Third country issuers for which Croatia is the host member may make a public offering or list securities in Croatia only through an authorized investment firm or credit institution. Shares of issuers whose registered office is in a third country that are not listed in either that country or in the country where the majority of the shares are held may be traded on the official market only with the approval of the stock exchange. Following Croatia’s entry into the EU in 2013, Articles 380, 381, 382, 383, 384 subparagraphs 2, 3, and 4, and 385 of the CMA, regarding cross-border transactions, went into effect, and the provisions of Article 384 subparagraphs 1 and 4 and Articles 391, 392, 393, and 394 of the CMA were repealed. Status under IMF Articles of Agreement

Date of membership: December 21, 1961.

Article XIV

Restrictions and/or multiple currency practices: No.
Exchange measures imposed for security reasons: Yes. In accordance with IMF Executive Board Decision No. 144-(52/51)

Other security restrictions: No. Effective July 17, 2018, restrictions on Maldives entered into force. Effective June 18, 2019, these restrictions were repealed by Council Regulation (EU) No. 2019/985, which repealed Council Regulation (EU) No. 2018/1001 of 16 July 2018. Note: Regulation (EU) No. 2018/1001 provided for the imposition of measures (including freezing of funds and economic resources) against persons, entities, or bodies that were to be listed in Annex I of the same Regulation; however, no persons, entities, or bodies were included in Annex I.

Exchange Arrangement

Currency: Yes. The currency of Cyprus is the euro.

Other legal tender: No.

Exchange rate structure

Unitary: Yes.
Dual Multiple

Classification

No separate legal tender
The exchange rate arrangement of the euro area is free floating. Cyprus participates in a currency union (EMU) with 18 other members of the EU and has no separate legal tender. The euro, the common currency, floats freely and independently against other currencies. The ECB publishes information regarding its interventions; it last intervened in March 2011. When it intervenes, the ECB intervenes at the quotes of the market makers.

The ECB publishes a reference rate based on the daily concertation procedure between CBs within and outside the European System of Central Banks, which normally takes place at 14:15 Central European Time. The publication time of the euro foreign exchange reference rates is around 16:00 Central European Time. The reference rates against the euro are the averages of the buying and selling rates.
To maintain price stability is the primary objective of the Eurosystem and of the single monetary policy for which it is responsible. This is stated in the Treaty of the Functioning of the EU, Article 127(1).

“Without prejudice to the objective of price stability,” the Eurosystem will also “support the general economic policies in the Union with a view to contributing to the achievement of the objectives of the Union.” These include “sustainable development,” and “full employment,” and “sustainable and non-inflationary growth.” Price stability is defined as an inflation rate below but close to 2% over the medium term.

Authorized credit institutions may freely determine their exchange rates and foreign exchange commissions in transactions with their clients.

Institutions that have been authorized by the CBC to carry on the business of a credit institution may engage in foreign exchange dealing with the public, and no separate license is required for this activity. As of December 31, 2018, 33 credit institutions were authorized to operate in Cyprus.
Foreign exchange bureaus are allowed to operate in Cyprus subject to prior CBC approval, in accordance with the provisions of the CBC Bureaux de Change Directive of 2014. As of December 31, 2018, four foreign exchange bureaus were authorized to operate in Cyprus. Other institutions making currency payments and transfers on behalf of their clients are subject to licensing by the CBC on the basis of the Payment Services Laws of 2009–2010.

Controls on exports and imports of banknotes
No.

In accordance with the EU Regulation (EC) No. 1889/2005, cash controls have been implemented based on a mandatory declaration system for amounts of cash entering or leaving the EU with a value of €10,000 or more. Travelers entering or leaving the EU and carrying more than €10,000 are required to make a declaration to the relevant authorities of the member country through which they enter or leave the EU. The authorities must keep a record of such information and report it to their national financial intelligence unit. The obligation to declare is not fulfilled if the traveler makes no declaration or if the information provided is incorrect or incomplete. To check compliance with the regulation, the national authorities have the right to search natural persons, their baggage, and their means of transportation. In the event of failure to comply with the declaration obligation, cash may be detained by administrative order. The EU regulation requires member countries to impose penalties for failure to comply with the declaration obligation. If there are indications that cash is related to illegal activity, authorities of one member country may exchange information with authorities in other member countries. Under the framework of existing agreements on mutual administrative assistance, information obtained under the EU regulation may also be communicated to a third country in compliance with relevant national and EU provisions on the transfer of personal data to third countries. The EU regulation does not apply to physical cross-border transportation from one EU member country to another (that is, intra-EU transportation). Such transportation is not considered “cross-border” for the purposes of the EU regulation; the EU regulation only harmonizes the system for the EU’s external borders. Under national law, individuals traveling within the EU who enter or leave Cyprus must also declare banknotes and gold equal to or in excess of €10,000 or its equivalent. Failure to declare the banknotes and/or gold is punishable by a fine.

Different prudential liquidity requirements applied to deposits in local currency (euro), using both a maturity mismatch and a stock liquidity approach. The maximum mismatch ratios (deficit) allowed were (1) −17% of total deposits in the time band “zero to seven days” and (2) −30% in the time band “zero days to one month.” The minimum stock liquidity ratio for euro obligations was 18% (liquid assets as a percentage of total customer deposits, irrespective of maturity and other liabilities falling due within 12 months). Liquid assets for the foreign currency liquidity requirement could be maintained in euro, provided these liquid assets did not include the euro liquidity requirements and did not lead to excessive open foreign exchange positions for banks. Pursuant to Regulation (EU) No. 575/2013 and Regulation (EU) No. 2015/61, a liquidity coverage requirement (not differentiated by currency) was phased-in as from October 1, 2015, with an initial minimum ratio of 60%, increasing to 70% as from January 1, 2016, 80% January 1, 2017, and 100% effective January 1, 2018. |

Stabilized arrangement

The de jure exchange rate arrangement is free floating. The exchange rate of koruna is solely determined by supply and demand in the interbank foreign exchange market, in which the Czech National Bank (CNB) might participate. On April 6, 2017, the CNB removed its cap on the koruna, allowing it to appreciate beyond CZK 27.0 to the euro. Data on CNB’s foreign exchange operations are published on the CB’s web page with a monthly frequency. However, the CNB is legally allowed to conduct foreign exchange interventions to influence the koruna exchange rate and moderate excessive exchange rate volatility in exceptional situations. Also, the CNB might in the future renew its program of sales of a part of the CNB’s investment income on international reserves. These sales were suspended in November 2012 prior the introduction of exchange rate cap in November 2013. The de facto exchange rate arrangement is classified as floating.

Official exchange rate

Yes. The CNB declares foreign exchange market rates on the basis of its monitoring the movement of currencies in the interbank foreign exchange market. The CNB publishes daily rates for 33 currencies against the koruna for customs and accounting purposes. The published exchange rates correspond to rates for individual currencies on the foreign exchange market at 2:15 p.m. local time. Under the Act on Accounting and other legal norms, the exchange rates are used for nontrading purposes (that is, for valuing assets and liabilities, tax and customs proceedings, etc.).

Government and Central Bank

Inflation target
Yes.

Target number
Yes.

Point target

Target with tolerance band
Yes. The headline inflation target was 3% (±1%) until the end of 2009 and has been 2% (±1%) since 2010. The target for inflation is set as year-on-year (y-o-y) growth in consumer prices. The CNB strives to ensure that actual inflation in every month of a year does not differ from this target by more than one percentage point on either side.

Band/Range

Target measure

CPI
Yes.

The target is set for headline Consumer Price Index (CPI). In practice, the CNB concentrates on the “monetary policy-relevant inflation,” which excludes from the headline inflation first-round effects of indirect tax changes.

Core inflation

Target horizon
Yes. The monetary policy horizon is 12–18 months.

Operating target (policy rate)

Policy rate
Yes. There is no numerical interest rate target. Interest rates are used as the monetary policy instrument and their changes correspond to the relevant macroeconomic forecasts and their risks. The main CNB instrument is the two-week repo rate. In some situations, the CNB may use other instruments at its disposal. For instance, it may conduct foreign exchange interventions to influence the koruna exchange rate and moderate excessive exchange rate volatility. The CNB was using foreign exchange interventions from November 2013 till April 2017 as part of its exchange rate commitment with the aim of providing the required monetary policy easing in a situation where monetary-policy interest rates have reached “technical zero.”

Target corridor band

Other

Accountability
Yes.

Open letter
No.

Parliamentary hearings
Yes. Parliamentary hearings are held at least twice a year.

Other
No.

Transparency
Yes. The CNB promotes the importance of having a credible and transparent monetary policy to effectively anchor inflation expectations and thereby maintain price stability and overall macroeconomic stability in the Czech Republic.

Publication of votes
Yes. Voting ratio is published at the press conference on the day of decision. Individual votes on interest rates are published in the minutes of the Board meeting eight days after the meeting.

Publication of minutes
Yes. Minutes are published eight days after the meeting.

Publication of inflation forecasts
Yes. Forecasts are conducted and published in detail four times a year, including endogenous interest rates and exchange rate outlooks.

Commercial banks and bureaux de change set their own exchange rates.

There are two types of nonbank foreign exchange institutions in the Czech Republic: (1) foreign exchange institutions authorized only for cash transactions (bureau-de-change activity—999 registration holders as of December 31, 2018); and (2) noncash foreign exchange institutions—191 as of December 31, 2018. Under the national legislation (Act No. 370/2017 Coll., on Payments) implementing the Payment Services Directive 2 (No. 2015/2366/EC, PSD 2), noncash spot currency exchange transactions are permitted only within the framework of payment transactions, and a payment institution license or a small payment institution registration (as defined in Article 32 of the PSD) is required. Therefore, all noncash foreign exchange institutions must have a new payment institution license or a small payment institution registration. There were 157 small payment institutions and 24 payment institutions as of December 31, 2018 (not all of them necessarily engaged in the spot exchange market, though). Under Directive No. 2009/110/EC on the taking up, pursuit, and prudential supervision of the business of electronic money institutions (EMD), electronic money institutions and small electronic money institutions may carry out this activity, provided they are authorized to provide payment services. There were ten such small electronic money institutions as of December 31, 2018 (not all of them necessarily engaged in the spot exchange market, though). The CNB issues these licenses. Foreign cash foreign exchange bureaus must be licensed. The licensing requirements for foreign entities are similar to those for Czech entities. Payment institutions in an EU member state may operate in the Czech Republic under the European passport regime under Article 28 of the PSD 2. The operation of cash foreign exchange bureaus is governed by Act No. 277/2013 Coll., on Foreign Exchange Activities. This law sets out the reporting requirements to the CNB, registration of business premises, and information for customers about exchange rates and fees and requirements. Cash foreign exchange bureaus may maintain accounts abroad and may purchase and sell only banknotes, coins, and checks. They may not make payments on behalf of their clients. Noncash foreign exchange operations are governed by the Payments Act implementing the PSD 2 and the EMD, EC delegated and implementing regulations and decrees of the CNB. Foreign exchange services within the scope of Article 18(1)a of the PSD 2, which also apply to electronic money institutions under Article 3 of the EMD, may be provided in addition to the payment services listed in the annex to the PSD 2, including transfers on behalf of clients. Under Article 10 of the PSD 2 and Article 22 of the Payments Act, noncash foreign exchange institutions may have accounts in credit institutions in an EU member country or a third country with banking supervision similar to that of the CNB. The same rules apply to electronic money institutions under Article 80 of the Payments Act. All institutions must comply with measures for the prevention of money laundering and terrorism financing under the Anti-Money-Laundering Directive (No. 2015/849) and implementing Czech legislation (Act No. 253/2008 Coll.). Under Act No. 136/2011 Coll., on the circulation of banknotes and coins, as amended, employees handling foreign currency of cash and noncash foreign exchange Institutions must complete a CNB course on the identification of counterfeit banknotes and coins.

The Czech Republic is a member of the EU.

On October 18, 2016, the Foreign Exchange Act No. 219/1995 Coll. was repealed by Act No. 323/2016 Coll. Act No. 323/2016 Coll. does not replace the Foreign Exchange Act as most foreign exchange activities have been already regulated by Foreign Exchange Activities Act No. 277/2013 Coll. and the remaining provisions by the Crisis Management Act No. 240/2000 Coll. The Czech government is authorized to apply restrictions during the state of emergency only. To resolve the state of crisis the Czech government must discuss with the CNB measures that are within the scope of the activity of the above bank. Certain measures are in effect to prevent money laundering and the financing of terrorism.

In accordance with Regulation (EC) No. 1889/2005 of the European Parliament and the Council of October 26, 2005, on controls of cash entering or leaving the EU, cash controls have been implemented by National Act No. 253/2008 Coll. on Selected Measures against Legitimization of Proceeds of Crime and Financing of Terrorism in the Czech Republic. Cash controls are based on a mandatory declaration system. Natural persons must declare to the customs authorities in writing imports and exports of currency of the Czech Republic or another country in the amount of €10,000 or more on entry into the Czech Republic from a non-EU third country and on exit to any such territory. The customs authorities must keep a record of such information and report it to the financial intelligence unit. The obligation to declare is not fulfilled if the traveler does not make a declaration or if the information provided is incorrect or incomplete. To check compliance with the national law, the customs authorities have the right to check natural persons, their baggage, and their means of transportation. Cash may be confiscated in the event of failure to comply with the declaration obligation. The national law allows penalties up to CZK 10 million or a forfeiture of the items for failure to comply with the declaration obligation. If there are indications that cash is related to illegal activity, the customs authorities may exchange information with the appropriate authorities in other member countries. Under the framework of existing agreements on mutual administrative assistance, information obtained under the EU regulation may also be communicated to a third country in compliance with relevant national and EU provisions on the transfer of personal data to third countries. Because the Czech Republic has no external borders with third countries, cash controls are applied only at international airports and in respect to the international post. The Czech Republic does not apply cash controls to cross-border movements of cash within the EU. Such transportation is not considered “cross-border” for the purposes of the EU regulation; the EU regulation harmonizes the system only for the EU’s external borders.

At the request of the CNB, legal entities with branches in the Czech Republic and natural persons with permanent residence in the Czech Republic must report accounts and balances on accounts or other forms of deposit abroad, including money entrusted for deposit. Foreign legal entities and natural persons may be asked to fulfill this requirement for their business in the Czech Republic.

Prudential limits apply to pension companies (that administer 3rd pillar transformed and participation funds) and other institutions. Controls apply to transformed fund deposits in nonresident institutions by the pension companies unless the nonresident institution is a bank with a registered office in the Czech Republic, a branch of a foreign bank in the Czech Republic, or a bank with a registered office in an OECD member. Pension companies may invest assets in pension/participation funds (3rd pillar) in deposits that are freely redeemable or time deposits whose maturity does not exceed two years of a bank headquartered in the Czech Republic, a foreign bank headquartered in another EU member, or a bank headquartered in another foreign country whose prudential rules the CNB considers equivalent to those of the EU. The Solvency II regulatory regime was introduced September 23, 2016, and second pillar pension funds were abolished January 1, 2016, and liquidated by December 31, 2017.

In the Czech Republic, investments of insurance and reinsurance companies are regulated by the Insurance Act (Act No. 277/2009 Coll.). The Solvency II Directive was transposed into the Insurance Act September 23, 2016. Since then, rules for investments of insurers and reinsurers have not changed. The rules are based on the prudent person principle. There are no legal quantitative limits, nevertheless insurance and reinsurance companies must follow stipulated principles, for example:

1. Investments are only possible in assets whose risks the company concerned can properly identify, measure, monitor, manage, control and report and take them into account appropriately in the assessment of its overall needs. All assets must be invested in such a manner as to ensure the security, liquidity, and profitability of the portfolio as a whole.

2. The assets intended to settle liabilities must be invested in a manner adequate to the nature and duration of insurance/reinsurance obligations and in the best interests of all policyholders and beneficiaries.

3. Investments must be diversified in such a way as to avoid excessive dependence on a particular asset, issuer, or group of persons or geographical area, and to avoid excessive accumulation of risk in the portfolio as a whole.

Moreover, the relevant insurance/reinsurance company has to set the rules for its investments according to above-mentioned principles.

No legal quantitative limits on investment portfolio held locally are stipulated. Generally, the rules for investments are based on the prudent person principle. See the description in XII.B.1.

In terms of currency-matching, no legal quantitative rules on assets/liabilities composition are stipulated. Generally, the rules for investments are based on the prudent person principle. See the description in XII.B.1.

Pension funds are regulated by the Supplementary Pension Savings Act No. 427/2011 Coll., also known as 3rd pillars of the National Pension Scheme. Pension funds and pension companies are supervised by the CNB, and the law prescribes their prudential rules on eligible assets, including investment limits. These limits vary, depending on the kind of fund and its strategy. There is only a limited prescribed strategy for 3rd pillar funds, except for the conservative plan, which must comply with the portfolio composition and investment limits. Transformed pension funds (3rd pillar): In 2013, pension funds were changed from self-management to transformed pension plans managed by pension companies, and clients’ and shareholders’ assets are now separate. There is now a guarantee of zero plus yields for... which the pension company must hold sufficient funds (or decrease its own funds). General robust prudential rules apply to the management of pension funds. The law prescribes eligible assets and investment limits—for example, 10% in instruments issued by the same entity, except government bonds; 10% in real estate; 50% in assets in the currency of liabilities to beneficiaries and use of derivatives only for hedging. Pension funds and pension companies are authorized and supervised by the CNB under Act No. 42/1994 Coll.—State-Contributory Supplementary Pension Insurance Act. Supplementary pension savings (3rd pillar): In 2013, the law adopted in 2011 established a new 3rd pillar based on UCITS principles. Pension funds are managed by a pension company authorized and supervised by the CNB under UCITS-like prudential rules. Pension savings are in individual pension plans that allow investment in a broader array of participation funds (type of common fund). Employers are encouraged by tax law to contribute. Savings are supported by a direct government contribution. The conservative fund for the participation pension funds (3rd pillar) is the only mandatory fund. Similarly to the UCITS rules, the law prescribes eligible assets. The investments may consist only of transferable securities; risk management is required, and techniques and instruments for efficient portfolio management are allowed. The conservative plan (3rd pillar) may invest only in bonds, money market instruments, money market funds, and deposits. Investment limits are 30% for private bonds and money market instruments. Limits for a single issuer are 5%–100% for public bonds with a qualified rating. Other plans must invest in UCITS-like transferable securities. Limits for collective investment schemes are 5%–35%. Institutions for Occupational Retirement Provision (IORPs—2nd pillar): Domestic IORPs are prohibited. EU-IORPs are permitted if the contributing employer is in the Czech Republic.

Limits (max.) on securities issued by nonresidents
Yes. For transitional-transformed pension funds, bonds and other debt securities are not allowed unless they are issued by governments and CBs of OECD members; guaranteed by such governments; or issued by the EIB, EBRD, or IBRD (Article 33 of the Act on Pension Funds). For supplementary pension savings (3rd pillar), up to 100% may be in bonds and money market instruments issued by governments and CBs of OECD members with a qualified rating. Limits for other single issuers are 5%–20%. The limit for other financial instruments is 30% (conservative fund).

Limits (max.) on investment portfolio held abroad
No. Safekeeping of assets is provided by depository banks located in the Czech Republic; deposits abroad are allowed only under an agreement with the depository bank.

Limits (min.) on investment portfolio held locally
No.

Currency-matching regulations on assets/liabilities composition
Yes. At least 50% of assets must be denominated in the currency of pension fund liabilities to beneficiaries for plans in the transitional-transformed pension fund. Only assets in the conservative fund for supplementary pension savings (3rd pillar) must be fully hedged against currency risk.

Investment firms and collective investment funds
Yes. Act No. 240/2013 Coll. on Investment Companies and Investment Funds replaced Act No. 189/2004 Coll. on Collective Investments in 2013. The law prescribes prudential rules for management of collective investment in accordance with the UCITS directive. Law No. 240/2013 Coll. on Investment Companies and Investment Funds together with implementing Government Decree No. 243/213 Coll. prescribes eligible assets and investment limits for UCITS funds and non-UCITS funds, which are permitted to offer to the general public. Funds of qualified investors have a wide range of investment

Conventional peg
Yes. The exchange rate arrangement is a conventional peg. The formal framework for the Danish fixed exchange rate policy is the ERM II. Denmark participates in the ERM II with a central rate of DKr 746.038 per €100. The central rate is a conversion of the central rate vis-à-vis the deutsche mark before the third stage of the EMU and was last adjusted in January 1987. Denmark has entered into an agreement with the ECB and the euro area member countries on a narrower fluctuation band of ±2.25%. In recent years, the Danmarks Nationalbank (DN) has consistently maintained a stable krone within less than 1% of the central rate. The DN’s net purchase or sale of foreign currency during a month is published at 4:00 p.m. on the second working day of the following month in the Foreign Exchange and Liquidity press release. The agreement on Denmark’s fixed exchange rate policy vis-à-vis the euro within a narrow fluctuation band of ±2.25% around the central rate in ERM II was concluded at an informal meeting of the Economic and Financial Affairs Council (ECOFIN Council) of September 25–27, 1998, in Vienna, between the ministers of economy and finance and the CB governors of the EU member countries.

Official exchange rate

The DN is responsible for monetary policy; exchange rate policy is set by the Danish government in consultation with the DN. Section 2 (3) of the Danish Act on Foreign Exchange (Consolidated Act No. 279, April 11, 1988) states, “Guidelines for the foreign-exchange policy to be conducted while the Act is in force shall be laid down after negotiation between Danmarks Nationalbank and the Royal Bank Commissioner.” The Royal Bank commissioner is the formal link between the government and the DN. The minister for business and growth is the Royal Bank commissioner. The DN publishes reference exchange rates (fixed by the DN against kroner).

In accordance with Regulation (EC) No. 1889/2005, cash controls have been implemented based on a mandatory declaration system for amounts of cash entering or leaving the EU with a value of €10,000 or more. Natural persons entering or leaving the EU and carrying more than €10,000 are required to make a declaration to the competent authorities of the member state through which they enter or leave the EU. This measure is included in the Danish Customs Act, Section 10a(2) which also applies to cross-border transportation from Denmark to another EU member state and from another EU member state to Denmark and to legal and natural persons sending or receiving amounts of cash with a value of more than €10,000. The authorities must keep a record of such information and report it to their national financial intelligence unit. The obligation to declare is not fulfilled if the person makes no declaration or if the information provided is incorrect or incomplete. To check compliance with the regulation, the national authorities have the right to search natural persons, their baggage, and their means of transportation. In the event of failure to comply with the declaration obligation, cash may be confiscated. The EU regulation requires member states to impose penalties for failure to comply with the declaration obligation. If there are indications that cash is related to illegal activity, authorities of one member state may exchange information with authorities in other member states. Under the framework of existing agreements on mutual administrative assistance, information obtained under the EU regulation may also be communicated to a third country in compliance with relevant national and EU provisions on the transfer of personal data to third countries. The EU regulation does not apply to physical cross-border transportation from one EU member state to another (that is, intra-EU transportation). Such transportation is not considered “cross-border” for the purpose of the regulation; the regulation only harmonizes the system for the EU’s external borders.
than €10,000 are required to make a declaration to the Danish customs and tax administration. Natural persons entering or leaving Denmark and carrying amounts of cash with a value of more than €10,000 and legal and natural persons receiving or sending amounts of cash with a value of more than €10,000 are required to make a declaration to the Danish customs and tax administration.

Foreign exchange market  Yes. The official buying and selling rates for currencies other than the US dollar are set by local banks and money changers, based on cross-rates for the US dollar in international markets. Banks may freely set quotes and commissions in transactions with their clients.

Spot exchange market  Yes. Institutions that deal in foreign exchange with the public are authorized by the BCD. As of December 31, 2018, 13 credit institutions and 22 foreign exchange bureaus operating in Djibouti were authorized. Foreign exchange bureaus may not engage in foreign exchange transactions directly with the BCD but may maintain accounts abroad. The operations of licensed foreign exchange bureaus are limited to the purchase and sale of banknotes. Transfer bureaus (hawalas) may engage in exchange operations and make foreign currency payments and transfers on behalf of their clients.

Operated by the central bank  Yes.
Foreign exchange standing facility  Yes. The BCD stands ready to exchange US dollars for Djibouti francs at the fixed exchange rate of DF 177.721 per US dollar without a margin or commission. The BCD exchanges unlimited amounts of US dollars with the treasury and banks at the fixed exchange rate through transfers between accounts held abroad. Foreign exchange bureaus handle the retail end of this business with large overseas transfers.

Allocation  No.
Auction  No.
Fixing  No.

Interbank market  Yes. ADs are allowed to trade foreign exchange with each other, but the interbank foreign exchange market is not active. Banks operating on the local market use the interbank market. Islamic banks use a number of liquidity management instruments, including the interbank musharaka and the interbank mudarabah. However, banks primarily rely on international financing arrangements rather than the interbank market for their liquidity requirements.

A Paris Club agreement was reached in October 2008, and bilateral payments agreements have been signed with two creditors; one is pending signature. The authorities are requesting equivalent treatment of their arrears to Paris Club and non-Paris Club official creditors. As of December 31, 2017, Djibouti had arrears to the Islamic Republic of Iran (US$4.7 million) and India (US$3.8 million). Said arrears are being renegotiated on a bilateral basis. There are also arrears to China (US$3.1 million), the Abu Dhabi Fund (US$3.9 million), and the Inter-American Development Bank amounting to US$0.9 million. The rest of the stock of arrears...
(US$1.99 million) is related to unpaid past due amounts to the African Development Bank, the European Investment Bank, Turkey, the Arab Fund for Economic and Social Development, and the International Fund for Agricultural Development.

The stock of the government’s external debt arrears (not including Iran, Exim Bank India, the SDF, and Exim Bank China) at June 30, 2019, amounted to DJF 404 million, comprised of unpaid maturities with the EIB, BPI France, IDB, and the Kuwait Fund for Arab Economic Development. A debt rescheduling arrangement is still pending for payments in arrears with Iran amounting to DJF 837 million. The stock of debt arrears with the SDF and Exim Bank China amounts to 4,833 million and is subject to renegotiation with the relevant donors.

Exim Bank India debts, amounting to DJF 1,857 billion, are still pending settlement, awaiting the conclusion of an agreement for the sale of the cement plant.

The ECCB sets an indicative rate for commercial banks. This rate has been EC$2.6882–EC$2.7169 per US dollar for a long time. Commercial banks may set commissions freely in transactions with their clients.

Banks are allowed to purchase or sell foreign currency from each other as well as to and from the ECCB. The commercial banks are not required to report their daily foreign exchange activity to the ECCB. The commercial banks are viewed as the exchange bureaus. Foreign exchange transfer institutions, such as MoneyGram and Western Union, and foreign exchange bureaus do not do business with and are not licensed by the ECCB.

The ECCB sells and buys US dollars at a fixed exchange rate of EC$2.7 per US dollar. Actual rates may differ slightly, so that the ECCB can cover its administrative expenses. There is no bid-ask spread.

There is no formal interbank foreign exchange market.

Imports from Iraq are prohibited.
Imports of specified goods from non-OECS countries, Belize, and the CARICOM countries require a license. Imports of certain goods from the more developed CARICOM countries (Barbados, Guyana, Jamaica, Trinidad and Tobago) also require a license.
Certain goods require a license for public health or safety reasons.
There are certain quantitative restrictions on imports of flour.

Most rates are ad valorem. Dominica applies the fourth phase of the CARICOM CET. The maximum tariffs on most CARICOM agricultural and nonagricultural products are 40% and 20%, respectively. Lower rates apply to machinery (0% to 15%) and some essential foodstuffs (0% to 15%), whereas higher rates apply to import-substituting domestic appliances (20%–35%) and motor vehicles (10%–40%). Specific taxes are applied to some goods. These include an excise tax levied on (1) motor vehicles, (2) alcohol, (3) petroleum products, and (4) tobacco and tobacco substitutes at the rates set out in the Excise Tax Regulations (SRO 5) of 2006. Certain imports are exempt. A VAT is levied, and legislation designates certain zero-rated items and exempt imports. Crawl-like arrangement: Yes.

The de jure exchange rate arrangement is managed float. The Central Bank of the Dominican Republic (CBDR) aims to increase gradually the flexibility of the exchange rate alongside the implementation of the inflation-targeting framework formally adopted in 2012. The CBDR does not pursue a particular fixed exchange rate level, but rather seeks to manage a pathway around its long-term equilibrium value, consistent with the fundamentals of the Dominican Republic economy and its inflation target. The CBDR intervenes in the foreign exchange market to avoid instances of excessive exchange rate volatility.
volatility that might affect the inflation target given that the exchange rate pass-through remains high. Since February 2010, the peso has followed a depreciating trend against the US dollar within a margin of less than 2%. Accordingly, the de facto exchange rate arrangement is classified as a crawl-like arrangement. The CBDR publishes data on foreign exchange sales and purchases in the foreign exchange market by different institutional actors (financial intermediaries and remittance/foreign exchange agents). The data are published on a gross (all transactions) basis and a net basis (excluding interbank operations). The CBDR does not disclose data on its volume of foreign exchange transactions with financial intermediaries.

Law No. 249-17 considers fixed and variable rate securities to be publicly offered securities.

The Office of the Superintendent of the Securities Market is currently preparing the regulations on public offerings, administrators and investment funds, public offering trusts, and securitization companies and the securitization process, as required by Law No. 249-17 (Transitional Provision Three of the Law on the Securities Market).

Shares or other securities of a participating nature

The Office of the Superintendent of the Securities Market is currently preparing the Regulation on Public Offerings, which will establish the legal framework for the issuance of shares. However, securities of a participating nature are handled by investment funds and public offering trusts.

Purchase locally by nonresidents

No.

Public offerings by foreigners are governed by the Law on the Securities Market, Regulation No. 664-12, and the Regulation on the Authorization of Public Offerings of Securities. In addition to the requirements applicable to domestic issuers, there is a requirement that documents be translated into Spanish and be duly authenticated by the competent authorities in the home country and by consular officials of the Dominican Republic in that country. As well, they must comply with the provisions of Article 8 of the General Law on Commercial Companies No. 479-08, as amended, requiring them to register their domicile in the entry that they make in the Commercial Registry of the jurisdiction of that domicile.

The sale of publicly offered securities by nonresidents within the Dominican territory is regulated by the Law on the Securities Market. The Office of the Superintendent of the Securities Market regulates activities, operations, and transactions on the securities market of the Dominican Republic, including publicly offered securities that are offered or traded in the national territory.

Only publicly offered securities that are promoted by a securities intermediary registered in the Registry and that meet the requirements established in the regulations and in the internal bylaws of the securities markets and the centralized securities depository may be listed in the foreign securities trading system. Foreign securities issued by issuers entitled to differential treatment may be registered and promoted by their issuer or by a securities intermediary. The regulations will establish the details for the registration and trading of foreign securities publicly offered within the country, for which the approval of the Monetary Board is required.

The Regulation on Public Offerings, which will regulate the sale of foreign securities, is currently being prepared.

Purchase abroad by residents

Residents who are participants in the securities market for the sale or issue of publicly offered securities abroad must obtain an authorization before selling or issuing abroad. Pursuant to Article 12 regarding the classification of market sensitive information established in Resolution R-CN 2015-33-MV, securities issuers and participants subject to this regulation are required to inform the Office of the Superintendent of the Securities Market of authorizations for a public offering of securities on the domestic market or abroad.

Notification of the Office of the Superintendent of the Securities Market is not required for residents who are not participants in the securities market.

- Bonds or other debt securities: Yes.

The issuance of publicly offered securities in the Dominican Republic requires the prior authorization of the Office of the Superintendent of the Securities Market. Certain issuers, such as the CB, the government, and multilateral agencies, and the securities they issue, are governed by their own laws and are exempt from the authorization of the Office of the Superintendent for public offerings. They must submit the legal basis for each issuance and the description of the essential characteristics of the securities for purpose of entry in the Registry. The issuance of publicly offered securities in the Dominican territory is applicable to both residents and nonresidents. Participants in the securities market that issue abroad must comply with the provisions of Article 12 of the Regulation on Market Sensitive Information. If they are not participants in the securities markets, compliance with this provision is not required.

Full-service banks (bancos multiples) may grant loans in US dollars for up to 100% of their available resources obtained in foreign currency and held in the form of savings or time deposits. Eighty-five percent of these loans must be directed to individuals or legal entities that generate foreign exchange. The foreign-currency financing limit does not apply to financial resources in US dollars to be used for the importation, distribution, and promotion of the use of natural gas as an alternative fossil fuel for the power generation sector and public transportation.

The CBDR is authorized to phase out the amount of resources full-service banks are required to hold with the CBDR to meet the investment ratio, provided this authorization is stipulated under the legal reserve requirement policy set forth by the Monetary Board.

Foreign-currency-denominated current accounts are not allowed. The opening of current accounts in a foreign currency is not included in the list of operations or services that can be carried out or provided by financial intermediaries pursuant to the Monetary and Financial Law No. 183-02, Articles 40, 41, 42, 43, and 75.

Foreign currency reserve requirements, applicable to full-service banks and for the purpose of monitoring liquidity and imposing penalties, are calculated daily and weekly, respectively, at a ratio of 12% on liabilities subject to reserve requirements. Domestic currency reserve requirements of full-service banks are calculated daily, for the purposes of liquidity monitoring and penalty imposition.

Requirements to maintain liquid assets to mitigate liquidity risk apply equally to all currencies. Nevertheless, these requirements do differ based on reserves, which are determined by reserve requirements. Given that reserve requirements differ based on currency, this differentiation indirectly affects liquid asset requirements. Intermediary financial institutions must have liquid assets equal to or greater than 80% of their short-term liabilities at terms of up to 30 days and equal to or greater than 70% of their short-term liabilities at terms of up to 90 days.

Full-service banks and credit institutions may extend direct or indirect loans and guarantees or endorsements to a resident or nonresident individual, legal entity, or risk group for up to 10% of their paid-up capital and reserves, and up to 20% of capital and reserves if such operations are secured with first-ranking mortgages or real guarantees. Restrictions apply to the extension of direct or indirect loans to related persons or institutions in excess of certain percentages of paid-up capital.

Full-service banks may invest up to 20% of their paid-up capital in branches, agencies, and representative offices abroad and they may make equity investments in foreign financial institutions. Full-service banks that invest abroad or open cross-border branches must fulfill certain minimum requirements, including (1) authorization by the Monetary Board, which requires approval of the Office of the Superintendent of Banks; (2) a solvency ratio equal to or greater than 10% and fulfillment of prudential requirements in the Monetary and Financial Law or in Monetary Board resolutions; (3) sufficient management capacity to perform offshore functions; (4) maintenance of a cooperation agreement between the Office of the Superintendent of Banks and the host-country supervisory authorities; (5) approval by the host-country authorities of the investment; (6) a favorable report from the host-country supervisory authorities regarding the rating and soundness of the financial intermediary in which investment is to be made; and (7) submission of necessary documentation to the Office of the Superintendent of Banks.

Exchange Arrangement

Currency Yes. The currency of Ecuador is the US dollar.

Other legal tender Yes. In accordance with Article 94 “Currency in the Republic of Ecuador,” all transactions, monetary and financial operations, and the relevant accounting records executed in the Republic of Ecuador must be drawn up in US dollars in accordance with this Code. The circulation, exchange, withdrawal, and demonetization of US dollars, the currency of the Republic of Ecuador, must be exclusively incumbent on the Central Bank of Ecuador (CBE), as provided under this Code and the regulations issued by the Monetary and Financial Policy and Regulation Board. The CBE is the sole entity authorized to provide and manage national coins in the Republic of Ecuador, equivalent to and convertible to US dollars, as provided under this Code and subject to the regulation and authorization of the Monetary and Financial Policy and Regulation Board. The currency determined in this Article is a means of payment. The currency is valid as legal tender in the Republic of Ecuador in the framework of the regulations issued by the Monetary and Financial Policy and Regulation Board. The state may not in any case require any individual or legal entity under private law to accept currency other than the US dollar.
The exchange rate arrangement is an arrangement with no separate legal tender. The US dollar is the currency of Ecuador, which is freely circulating. All transactions and monetary and financial operations, as well as the relevant accounting records, executed in Ecuador must be denominated in US dollars in accordance with Articles 43 and 94 of the Monetary and Financial Organic Code. The circulation, exchange, withdrawal, and destruction of US dollars, which is legal tender in Ecuador, must be the exclusive power of the CBE, in accordance with the provisions established in this Code and the regulations prepared by the Monetary and Financial Policy and Regulation Board. Article 95 provides that the CBE and, in exceptional cases provided by the Board, institutions in the private financial system must be required to meet demand for liquidity in the Republic of Ecuador in a timely manner to ensure that economic transactions are carried out in accordance with the regulations issued by the Monetary and Financial Policy and Regulation Board. For that purpose, they must be authorized to carry out any remittances that may be required, that are not to be considered import or export operations. Such operations carried out by the CBE may not be subject to any tax in the country.

Under the legal mandate provided by the Organic Law for Economic Recovery, Strengthening of Dollarization, and Modernization of Financial Management, on December 29, 2017, the CBE proceeded to close the electronic money accounts and to issue the balances to their holders.

(1) The CBE’s power to implement and administer electronic currency was eliminated (See Article 14(21), Article 94 of the Monetary and Financial Organic Code).

(2) It is established that electronic payment mechanisms will be implemented and operated by entities in the financial system (See Article 101 of the Monetary and Financial Organic Code).

(3) It is ordered that all credit operations must be credited through the national payment system by electronic fund transfer or other electronic payment mechanisms (See Article 194(12), Paragraph (a)).

Against this backdrop, effective February 14, 2018, the Monetary and Financial Policy and Regulation Board issued Resolution No. 441-2018-M “Regulation for Management of Electronic Means of Payment” establishing a section on management of the “Mobile Payment System” defined as the transfer of funds originating from a cellular telephone associated with an account with an institution in the national financial system to make and receive payments. In the Mobile Payment System, the CBE undertakes the role of oversight and supervision of the system, while the administration is responsible for institutions in the financial system.

Ecuador has no tax on foreign exchange operations. However, all transfers abroad are subject to the 5% Impuesto a la Salida de Divisas (ISD) tax barring certain exemptions. Outflows in connection with bank loans exceeding one year are exempt for specific sectors indicated in the Productivity code (such as housing and microfinance).

In accordance with Article 95 of the Monetary and Financial Organic Code, “Requirement to Provide Liquidity,” the CBE and, in exceptional cases provided by the Board, institutions in the private financial system must be required to meet demand for liquidity in the Republic of Ecuador in a timely manner to ensure that economic transactions are carried out in accordance with the regulations issued by the Monetary and Financial Policy and Regulation Board. For that purpose, they must be authorized to carry out any remittances that may be required, not to be considered import or export operations. Such operations carried out by the CBE may not be subject to any tax in the country.

Further, Article 96 “Physical remittances of money to guarantee currency in circulation” provides that remittances of physical money to guarantee currency in circulation in the national economy to and from Ecuador may be carried out by the CBE and by institutions in the national financial system in accordance with the rules issued for that purpose by the Monetary and Financial Policy and Regulation Board. These operations must comply with the Law on Prevention, Detection, and Eradication of the Crime of Money Laundering and the Financing of Crimes. When applications for currency submitted by institutions in the national financial system to the CBE exceed the targets established by the Monetary and Financial Policy and Regulation Board, remittances to Ecuador must be made against liquid external assets held abroad by financial institutions.

Because the Ecuadorian economy is dollarized and the law does not provide for the use of currencies other than the US dollar for making domestic transactions, there are no exchange markets, except of a marginal nature in financial institutions and on an informal level. Thus, the CBE does not intervene or engage in any type of activity in the national financial system in any currency other than the US dollar.

As of December 31, 2018, 24 institutions (23 national banks and 1 foreign bank) hold licenses granted by the SB. Financial institutions in accordance with Article 312 of the Constitution may not engage in any activity that is unrelated to the financial system. Article 194, Indent d, Numeral 5, of the Organic Monetary and Financial Code states that, with regard to services, financial entities may "on their own behalf or on behalf of third parties, carry out foreign exchange transactions, repo transactions, and issue and negotiate traveler’s checks.”

Article 43 of the Organic Monetary and Financial Code regarding information on trading in foreign currencies other than the US dollar states that entities in the national financial system authorized to trade in foreign currencies other than the US dollar are required to report to the CBE, following the form and periodicity specified by the Board, on the amounts and exchange rates of their transactions and to provide information needed by the Bank concerning movements in their foreign currency accounts. Failure to comply with this provision will be punishable as a serious infraction in accordance with the said Code.

The fiscal oversight agency must provide the CBE with the schedule of outward transfers from the General State Budget.

Exchange Measures

Restrictions and/or multiple currency practices

Yes.

The IMF staff report for the 2017 Article IV Consultation with Egypt states that, as of December 11, 2017, Egypt is an Article VIII member and maintains one exchange restriction subject to IMF jurisdiction under Article VIII, Sections 2(a) and 3 arising from a net debtor position under an inoperative bilateral payments arrangement with Bulgaria. (Country Report No. 18/14).

Exchange measures imposed for security reasons

Yes. Banks have been instructed to freeze accounts and assets of listed individuals and organizations associated with terrorism, in accordance with the relevant UNSC resolutions. Further, in 2002, the authorities established the EMLCU, which is the Egyptian financial intelligence unit responsible for combating money laundering and terrorism financing. The EMLCU receives reports of suspicious transactions from financial institutions and takes the necessary examination and investigation measures in coordination with the appropriate authorities. The EMLCU receives reports of suspicious transactions from financial institutions and designated nonfinancial businesses and professions concerning transactions suspected of being proceeds of a crime or involving money laundering or terrorism financing or attempts to conduct such transactions. The EMLCU takes the necessary examination and investigation measures in coordination with the appropriate authorities. AML/CFT Law No. 80 of 2002 was amended in May 2014, to address deficiencies in Egypt’s AML/CFT regime, including with regard to international standards on combating money laundering/financing of terrorism and proliferation of weapons of mass destruction. Egypt exited from the follow-up process at the Middle East and North Africa Region Financial Action Task Force (MENAFATF). In accordance with the amendments, the EMLCU will carry out Egypt’s commitment under international conventions, treaties, and charters with respect to terrorism financing and financing of the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction.

Yes. The currency of Egypt is the Egyptian pound.

No.

Exchange rate structure

Yes.
The de jure exchange rate arrangement is floating. On November 3, 2016, the CBE announced its decision to move, with immediate effect, to a liberalized exchange rate regime to quell any distortions in the domestic foreign currency market. Pursuant to the above, banks and other market participants are at liberty to quote and trade at any exchange rate. Bid and ask exchange rates are determined by forces of demand and supply. The CBE uses the prevailing market rate for any transactions it undertakes. While the exchange rate appears to have increased its flexibility from January 2019, more observations are necessary to determine its new trend. Until then, the de facto exchange rate arrangement remains classified as stabilized. The CBE does not publish intervention data.

The US dollar–pound official exchange rate is published daily through Reuters and Bloomberg. This rate reflects the weighted average interbank rate. The CBE uses its official rate to carry out foreign exchange transactions with banks, the government, and public institutions.
Monetary policy operates under a flexible money-targeting framework, where policy tools are utilized to anchor inflation expectations, to contain demand-side pressures and second-round effects of supply shocks to achieve inflation targets over the medium term, as well as to achieve reserve money targets that were designed to be consistent with the inflation targets. Policy tools include a corridor of overnight deposit and lending standing facilities, open market operations, and reserve requirements. Monetary policy rate is set by the CBE’s Monetary Policy Committee, which has seven members comprising of the governor of the CBE, two deputy governors, three other members of the Board of Directors, in addition to one external expert.

Exchange tax

Exchange subsidy

Foreign exchange market
Yes. The CBE allows market participants to freely decide the client and interbank bid and ask rates.

Spot exchange market
Yes. The CBE licenses nonbank foreign exchange dealers (foreign exchange bureaus, bazaars, and duty-free markets). As of December 31, 2018, there were 113 licensed foreign exchange bureaus, 61 bazaars, and 9 duty-free markets. Foreign exchange bureaus may buy and sell domestic and foreign means of payment (banknotes and traveler’s checks) on their own behalf. These transactions are determined by the quota assigned to the bank by the CBE, based on its commercial utilization and previous sales in the interbank market.

(3) On the auction day, the CBE announces the auction amount one

Banks’ maximum exposure abroad is calculated by country, financial institution, and group, taking into consideration a specific methodology. The CBE sets exposure limits to countries, financial institutions, and financial groups, related mainly to the bank’s capital base, countries’ ratings and their gross domestic product. The regulation sets concentration limits to high-risk exposures and does not specify exposure limits to each type of borrower as follows: The total high-risk exposure for each country should not exceed 40% of the concentration limit of that country. The total high-risk exposures for all countries should not exceed 100% of the bank’s capital base. The total high-risk exposures for non-investment grade countries should not exceed 20% of the bank’s capital base. The unutilized portion of the high-risk exposure limit may be directed to low risk exposures, but not vice versa.

As of December 31, 2018, 14 banks and 1 exchange bureau were authorized to participate in the foreign exchange market; the cooperative banks also participate. The SSF licenses exchange bureaus and banks. Because of the dollarization regime they do not deal directly with the CB.

Import licenses and other nontariff measures Yes.

Certain products require import licenses issued by specific government agencies, in areas related to (1) Ministry of National Defense: arms, ammunition, explosives, combustible chemical substances, lead, and pyrotechnic products; (2) Ministry of Agriculture and Livestock through the General Directorate of Plant Health and the General Directorate of Livestock: animal- and plant-based products and subproducts, agrochemicals, and biological products; (3) Ministry of Health: food products and beverages processed industrially, dangerous ingredients and potable and nonpotable alcohol, and fishery products; (4) Ministry of Environment and Natural Resources: ozone-depleting substances, solid waste, hazardous materials, and wildlife; (5) National Directorate of Medications; pharmaceutical products and chemicals; cleaning products, cosmetics, narcotics, psychotropic substances, aggregates, precursors, medications for human consumption, and controlled substances.

Positive list Yes.

Licenses issued by the MOF are required for authorized imports of ethyl alcohol, whether denatured or not, and authorization is required to import refined or raw cane sugar. The minister of health issues permits for ethyl alcohol, except when raw materials for various food industries are involved. Authorization by the Ministry of Defense is required for imports of weapons and explosives. An environmental permit is also required for imports of chemicals, either from the Ministry of Environment and Natural Resources, the Ministry of Agriculture and Livestock, or from the Ministry of Health. Importation of regulated industrial products requires registration with the Ministry of Health. The National Directorate of Medications is the regulatory agency for the import of pharmaceutical products, medical inputs, cosmetics, hygiene products, drugs and psychotropic products, and aggregates.

Negative list
Yes. El Salvador prohibits imports of the following products for reasons of health, security, public morality, or environmental protection: subversive material or teachings contrary to the political, social, and economic order; obscene materials; unethical or indecent films; abortion-related products; and slot machines. Imports of coffee in a form that can be used as seeds for planting and imports of coffee bushes are prohibited. Also prohibited are lightweight passenger and freight motor vehicles more than 8 years old and heavy passenger and freight vehicles more than 15 years old (except collector’s items and vehicles donated to the government or to public service or charitable organizations; those used exclusively by physically challenged persons; those providing a specific service, such as agricultural, earth-moving, or industrial work; and those connected with power generation plants, well drilling, and water purification units).

Open general licenses
No.

Licenses with quotas
Yes. The Ministry of Economy (MOE) grants import permits or licenses for products that are subject to some form of agricultural quota under the United States Free Trade Agreement, meaning that a given quantity may be imported with a zero tariff, including beef, pork, milk in liquid or powdered form, other dairy products, yellow or white corn, sorghum, chicken parts, and rice. A cheddar cheese quota is granted under the WTO commitments. Under the Partnership Agreement between Central America and the European Union, licenses are granted for products subject to agricultural quotas, such as whey, cured and streaky hams, prepared and preserved pork, milk powder, and cheese. Finally, an import quota is granted on a “first come, first served” basis to access the cheese quota negotiated in the Free Trade Agreement with Panama and for the yellow corn quota under the Free Trade Agreement between Central America and Mexico.

It is important to clarify that these are not limits on imports but rather quotas with preferential tariffs. In addition to these set amounts, importers are free to import any amount subject to payment of the corresponding tariff.

Other nontariff measures
Yes. Sugar intended for the domestic market must be fortified with vitamin A. The importation of dairy products prepared with reconstituted milk is prohibited.

Import taxes and/or tariffs
Yes. The Central American Import Tariff has the following base rates: 0% on raw materials and intermediate and capital goods not produced in the Central American Common Market (CACM), 5% on raw materials produced in the CACM, 10% on intermediate and capital goods produced in the CACM, and 15% on finished goods. El Salvador also has trade agreements with Bolivia (pending ratification), Chile, Colombia, Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Ecuador, the EU, Mexico, Panama, South Korea (ratified June 21, 2018, but not yet effective), Taiwan Province of China, the United States, and Venezuela, under which certain products included in tariff elimination programs are duty free. All goods originating in Central American countries may be traded without restriction within the region, except for those defined in Annex A to the General Treaty on Central American Economic Integration.

The average of the applied tariffs of El Salvador is 6.0%, the agricultural average is 11.8%, and the nonagricultural average is 5.1%. The minimum tariff is 0% and the maximum 164%.

Preshipment inspection | Yes.
The relevant directorate of the Ministry of Agriculture and Livestock conducts preshipment inspections of exports of basic foods such as beans, rice, sorghum, fresh loroco, and fresh papayas before exportation; agricultural precertification is also required. Dairy products require authorization from a quality control laboratory. All products of animal origin are subject to inspection. All products containing wood or packed in wooden crates or pallets require inspection and fumigation by the Organismo Internacional Regional de Sanidad Agropecuaria (OIRSA, The International Regional Organization for Plant and Animal Health). Exports must pass through a nonintrusive inspection system conducted by the customs authorities prior to shipment.

Other | Yes.
All exporters must be registered with the Import/Export Processing Center (CIEX El Salvador), before making any exports. The legislative decree established the CIEX El Salvador to centralize, expedite, and simplify the established legal procedures for the registration, authorization, and issuance of documents by various institutions and/or dependencies of the country involved in import and export operations in conformity with their respective responsibilities. The Integrated Foreign Trade System (SICEX) is used for exports, and if the transaction destinations are Costa Rica, Guatemala, Honduras, and Nicaragua, the operation is recorded in the exit customs of El Salvador and the entry customs of the relevant importing Central American country; the amount of taxes payable is... reported by the Internet. This process allows exporters to obtain the three authorizations through a single, integrated procedure. An imports system (SIMP) software tool allows importers and exporters to register and pay for the nonintrusive inspection service. There are service charges for obtaining prior processing for imports, covering the services of the Ministry of National Defense, the Ministry of Health, and the National Directorate of Medications. The system allows payment to be made electronically via two banks of the financial system, thus facilitating the handling of prior processing for imports through the SIMP, which is administered by the CIEX El Salvador. There is one-stop invoicing (facturación única) on behalf of third parties, which allows using a single tax number for various services provided by government institutions, registered in the CIEX El Salvador. In May 2017, the electronic payment system was also implemented for the product registry, the mutual recognition registry, and the updating of the product registry; these three services, which cover food products, thus simplify compliance with the required procedures for importing such products that fall within the purview of the Ministry of Health, which participates in the foreign trade one-stop window.

Export licenses

Exporters must be registered with the CIEX before exporting any products. Exports are authorized via the Internet through the SICEX, which is designed exclusively for that purpose. El Salvador has signed the CITES agreement, which prohibits exports of endangered plant and animal species, cultural heritage goods, as well as products, such as red beans (until December 31, 2018), that suffer domestic shortages. Other export products require authorization by other institutions before processing at the SICEX and the CIEX because of quota controls—for example, for cane sugar; agrochemicals; biological products; drugs and food for veterinary use (which also require registration); wildflowers and plants; basic foods such as beans of domestic origin, rice, sorghum, fresh loroco, and fresh papayas (which also require preshipment inspection); dairy products (which also require laboratory testing); meat; fish products (which may not be harvested without a permit); foodstuffs for human consumption; coffee (including roasted and ground); machinery; maquila textiles and garments subject to quotas; diesel fuel; propane; and butane gas. Ferrous and nonferrous products require authorization by the Directorate General of Customs. Exports of waste products from melting ferrous and nonferrous products included in tariff items 7204.10.00, 7204.29.00, and 7404.00.00 are prohibited. Citizens, foreigners, and legal entities are exempt from this provision if they are registered with the Directorate General of Customs and the waste products originate directly from their industrial processes.

Without quotas

Yes.

With quotas

Yes. Exports of sugar require the approval of the Salvadoran Sugar Council (CONSAA) and are administered under two arrangements. The portion traded with the United States, which is called the American quota or preferential market, is subject to preferential treatment that consists of a negotiated quantity of metric tons to be exported. Exporters are free to export the remaining sugar production to any country. In addition, under CAFTA-DR, quotas have been allocated for other products, such as beef, dairy products, ethanol, and peanuts. A reciprocal tariff quota arrangement with Panama has been introduced to protect the monetary value of certain types of cheeses. Under the Association Agreement with the EU, export tariff quotas are negotiated for garlic, cassava starch, sweet corn, mushrooms, sugar including organic sugar and products with a high sugar content, rice, beef, bulk rum, tuna loin, plastics, electrical harnesses and conductors, certain clothing products, and articles made of aluminum. An export quota for cheese was negotiated in the Free Trade Agreement with Panama.

Loans granted by banks to nonresidents or for investment abroad may not exceed 10% of the creditor bank’s equity capital. Total loans in this category may not exceed 150% of a bank’s equity capital. Loans in excess of 75% of the equity capital require authorization subject to documentation requirements. Specific provisions apply to these loans, ranging from a minimum of 0% to 100%, depending on the risk rating of the country in which the assets are held.

Investments in certain public works (for example, railroads, ports, canals) require government approval. FDI and inflows of capital with a maturity of more than one year must be registered with the Ministry of Economy. There are minimum capital requirements for businesses owned by foreign residents and those with foreign resident shareholders. Foreign individuals and legal entities may invest in El Salvador and enjoy the same rights and obligations as national investors and corporations. The constitution restricts foreign investment in the following activities: trade; industry; and small-scale services—specifically, coastal fishing—which are reserved for Salvadorans. The subsoil belongs to the government, which may grant concessions for its exploitation. Investments in shares of banks, finance companies, and exchange bureaus are subject to applicable laws.

Foreign investors may transfer abroad funds related to their investments without delay. Such transfers include net profits and dividends generated by their investments, proceeds from partial or total disposal of investments, and proceeds from the transfer of investments to third parties. As part of the 2012 amendments to the Law on Income Tax, Title VII Chapter III of Article 7 now includes a section titled “Income Tax on Distribution of Profits,” which requires income tax withholding of 5% of profits paid by domiciled taxpayers, parent companies, subsidiaries, branches, agencies, and other permanent establishments to partners, shareholders, associates, trustees, members, investors, and beneficiaries not domiciled in El Salvador.

creation of the Financial Supervision and Regulation System, consisting of the CB and the SSF; (2) establishment of a single superintendency for banking, insurance, securities, pensions, and other financial intermediaries; and (3) transfer of regulatory authority over the financial system to the CB.

The Law against Usury defines usury and sets the maximum rate of interest on loans obtained by individuals. This law applies to individuals and legal entities; financial institutions; commercial firms; savings banks; merchants engaged in the delivery of goods and services; pawn merchants; and in general, any person or entity who lends money, regardless of the manner used to record, conceal, or hide the operation. The CRB sets maximum rates based on the simple average of the effective interest rate on loans, expressed as a percent and published semiannually.

Effective January 1, 2019, the Constitutional Division of the Supreme Court of Justice declared the Financial Transactions Tax Law unconstitutional, which is no longer in force. Previously, the Financial Transactions Tax Law established new taxes on financial transactions as follows: (1) There is a tax on the amount paid for all checks and electronic transfers in El Salvador, in legal tender in circulation in the country, according to this law’s regulations. (2) All entities authorized to make these payments and transfers must withhold, as a tax to control liquidity, 0.25% of amounts exceeding US$5,000 on cash deposits, payments, and withdrawals a transaction or in aggregate on a monthly basis. Legislative Decree No. 764 Financial Transactions Tax Law was passed by the legislative assembly July 31, 2014, and published in the Official Gazette No. 142, Volume No. 404.

Borrowing abroad Yes.

External borrowing by financial institutions is subject to a reserve requirement of 5% (less than the cash reserve for deposits).

Maintenance of accounts abroad Yes.

Loans granted by banks to nonresidents or for investment abroad may not exceed 10% of the creditor bank’s equity capital. Total loans in this category may not exceed 150% of a bank’s equity capital. Loans in excess of 75% of the equity capital require authorization subject to documentation requirements. Specific provisions apply to these loans, ranging from a minimum of 0% to 100%, depending on the risk rating of the country where the assets are held.

Lending to nonresidents (financial or commercial credits) Yes.

Loans granted by banks to nonresidents or for investment abroad may not exceed 10% of the creditor bank’s equity capital. Total loans in this category may not exceed 150% of a bank’s equity capital. Loans in excess of 75% of the equity capital require authorization subject to documentation requirements. Specific provisions apply to these loans, ranging from a minimum of 0% to 100%, depending on the risk rating of the country where the assets are held.

Lending locally in foreign exchange No.

Purchase of locally issued securities denominated in foreign exchange No.

Differential treatment of deposit accounts in foreign exchange Yes.

There is no distinction in the treatment of deposits in local currency and in foreign currency.

Reserve requirements No.

There are no specific reserve requirements on foreign (nondollar) currencies. The average reserve requirement is currently about 22% of deposits but would vary as it depends on the maturity of deposits. In El Salvador, the term reserve requirement (encaje legal) is not used. The term liquidity reserve (reserva de liquidez) is preferred. The Standards Committee of the CRB approved, during Session No. CN-01/2019, effective February 20, 2019, the extension of the Temporary Measures for the Calculation of the Liquidity Reserve (Medidas Temporales para el Cálculo de la Reserva de Liquidez—MTL) to February 23, 2023. These measures reduce the liquidity reserve by 10% of the productive credit granted by financial institutions.

Liquid asset requirements
Yes.
Institutions must at all times maintain a ratio of 3% in investments with respect to the monthly average based on the daily balances of deposits in the preceding month; such investments must be made in foreign securities that are readily realizable.

Interest rate controls

Pursuant to the Banking Law, banks may execute financial operations in other countries through offices and subsidiaries of banks whose prudential supervision and regulations are consistent with international practices, subject to the laws of the host countries and authorization of the Superintendency.

In banks by nonresidents
No.

Open foreign exchange position limits
Yes.
The limit on the net open foreign exchange positions of commercial banks is 10% of capital and reserves. Regulations governing banks’ foreign currency borrowing and lending operations limit the difference between the institution’s total foreign-currency-denominated assets and future and contingent rights and its total foreign-currency-denominated liabilities and future and contingent obligations to 10% of equity. Since the Monetary Integration Act went into effect January 2001, the volume of foreign currency managed by financial intermediaries declined considerably.

Exchange transactions in euros between the BEAC and commercial banks are made at this rate. The BEAC’s OTC foreign exchange transactions are conducted exclusively with national public accountants and treasuries.

A fee of no more than 4% for CFA franc area notes and 10% for other currencies, not including the TCA and any other specific tax, is collected by licensed intermediaries on transactions in foreign banknotes and traveler’s checks. This fee covers all charges on OTC transactions and the intermediation margin.

No.

For current transactions and payments

No.

For capital transactions

No.

Transactions in capital and money market instruments

No.

Transactions in derivatives and other instruments

No.

Credit operations

No.

Use of foreign exchange among residents

Yes. The monetary unit is the CFA franc, which is the sole official currency and legal tender in all CEMAC member countries. Consequently, transactions among residents must be settled in domestic currency.

Payments arrangements

Yes.

Bilateral payments arrangements

No.
An operations account links all the countries with the French Treasury. All purchases and sales of foreign currencies and euros in exchange for CFA francs are ultimately settled by a debit or credit to the operations account. Governments may maintain foreign currency deposits related to oil reserves at commercial banks and use them to meet their external debt service obligations. Exchange regulations in the CEMAC member countries are harmonized.

Administration of control
Yes. Administration of the foreign exchange regulations is the responsibility of the MOFs of the CEMAC countries, which may delegate all or a portion of their authority to the BEAC, the COBAC, and licensed intermediaries. For example, authority is delegated to licensed intermediaries to carry out transactions with the rest of the world. They must verify the validity of transactions, collect statistics, and report these activities to the monetary authorities. However, certain types of transactions may not be delegated. The BEAC supervises the exchange regulations; evaluates foreign exchange hedging operations; reviews requests for approval of opening of foreign exchange accounts by some resident legal entities; and monitors the repatriation of export proceeds. The COBAC ensures that licensed intermediaries comply with certain provisions of these regulations, especially to prevent weakening of the CEMAC banking system.

Payments arrears
No. Licensed intermediaries may freely execute their customers’ payment orders. The related transfers may, at their request, be made through the BEAC. In this context, the MCA with France serves to guarantee the convertibility of the CFA franc. No payment arrears are allowed on the grounds that insufficient foreign exchange is available.

Controls on trade in gold (coins and/or bullion)
Yes. CEMAC residents are free to hold, purchase, and sell gold in any form within the CEMAC.

On domestic ownership and/or trade
Yes. Except in the case of manufactured articles containing small quantities of gold, CEMAC gold imports and exports are subject to approval by the appropriate authorities. The national treasuries and the BEAC are exempt from this requirement.

Controls on exports and imports of banknotes
Yes. Residents and nonresidents traveling from one country to another within the CEMAC may take with them an unlimited amount of CEMAC banknotes and coins.

On exports
Yes. CFA francs issued by the BEAC may not be exported to countries outside the CEMAC. However, departing resident travelers may have in their possession up to CFAF 100,000. During their trips outside the CEMAC, travelers must use payment instruments other than BEAC banknotes (foreign currency, traveler’s checks, bank drafts, transfers, etc.).

Foreign currency
Yes. Resident and nonresident travelers crossing CEMAC borders must, on exit, declare any foreign currency, securities, or instruments valued at more than CFAF 1 million to the customs authorities. Nonresident travelers leaving the CEMAC may take with them foreign currency valued at up to the amount they declared on entering the CEMAC. If they made no declaration on entry or if they are carrying sums exceeding those they brought into the CEMAC, they must explain the source of the amount in excess of CFAF 1 million. Supporting documents include pay slips and work permits (wage income), student cards (parental assistance for students and trainees), and notarized instruments (donations), among others.

CFA francs issued by the BEAC may not be imported from countries outside the CEMAC. However, arriving resident travelers may have in their possession up to CFAF 100,000.

Resident and nonresident travelers crossing CEMAC borders must, on entry, declare foreign currency, securities, or instruments valued at more than CFAF 1 million to the customs authorities.

The principle underlying the Central African Monetary Union is the centralization of reserves at the BEAC. Consequently, foreign currency acquired by residents in transactions with the rest of the world must be systematically repatriated and surrendered to the BEAC. Thus, only licensed intermediaries may maintain foreign exchange accounts with their correspondent banks abroad to meet their cash flow needs.

There are no specific regulations on foreign exchange accounts held by CEMAC residents with banks abroad. However, transactions with the rest of the world involving amounts exceeding CFAF 5 million must be settled by licensed intermediaries.

Accounts in domestic currency held abroad are not permitted, except within the CEMAC.

There are no restrictions on the opening of nonresident foreign exchange accounts within the CEMAC. Licensed intermediaries may open such accounts for any nonresident, on request, provided they inform the monetary authorities. Such accounts may not be overdrawn.

Capitales

EQUATORIAL GUINEA

Capital Transactions

The exchange regulations, including the section on capital flows within the CEMAC, do not apply to transactions between CEMAC member countries. There are no restrictions on most capital flows between CEMAC and non-CEMAC countries, provided they comply with the laws and regulations prohibiting drug financing and trafficking. Certain loans, direct investments, and the issuance, advertisement, and sale of foreign securities within the CEMAC are subject to administrative controls and require approval from the appropriate authorities. Controls on these transactions are applied indiscriminately to countries in the CFA franc area, other than CEMAC member countries, and all non-CFA franc area countries. Moreover, Article 61 of the General Regulations of the Central African Financial Market Supervisory Commission (COSUMAF), which entered into effect January 15, 2009, specifies that “when a nonresident legal entity plans a public offering on the Central African regional financial market, it must prepare a disclosure document and submit it to COSUMAF for approval prior to dissemination. The prior approval of the exchange control authority in the various countries concerned must also be obtained.” The article also states that “the issuer must appoint a correspondent (securities dealer) established in a CEMAC member state, where it elects domicile. This correspondent must be responsible for: (1) receiving correspondence from COSUMAF and (2) forwarding to COSUMAF all documents and information required under the laws and regulations or requested by COSUMAF.”

- Repatriation requirements: Yes. In the context of the centralization of foreign exchange reserves, foreign currency collected from capital transactions must be repatriated.

- Surrender requirements: Yes. Amounts collected in foreign currencies must be surrendered to the BEAC no later than 30 days after receipt.

- Controls on capital and money market instruments: Yes.

  - On capital market securities: Yes. The issuance, advertisement, and sale of foreign securities (shares and bonds issued by foreign enterprises) whose value exceeds CFAF 10 million are subject to MOF approval. Under CEMAC exchange regulations, transactions in capital market securities are treated in the same way as simple borrowing and lending operations, as opposed to direct investments, when the shares or equity held by the individual or legal entity represent less than 10% of the enterprise’s total equity. Borrowing and lending are not regulated by type of instrument or maturity.

  - Shares or other securities of a participating nature: Yes.

    - Purchase locally by nonresidents: Yes. Banks may verify and make payment for purchases of securities by nonresidents. Transactions must be reported within 30 days. When the total outstanding liabilities of a single borrower exceed CFAF 100 million, transactions are subject to MOF approval.

    - Sale or issue locally by nonresidents: Yes. The issuance, advertisement, and sale of securities within the CEMAC are subject to MOF approval when the amount involved exceeds CFAF 10 million. Transactions must be reported to the BEAC within 30 days.

Floating
Free floating Yes. The exchange rate arrangement of the euro area is free floating. Estonia participates in a currency union (EMU) with 18 other members of the EU and has no separate legal tender. The euro, the common currency, floats freely and independently against other currencies. The ECB publishes information regarding its interventions; it last intervened in March 2011. When it intervenes, the ECB intervenes at the quotes of the market makers.
Official exchange rate Yes. The ECB publishes a reference rate based on the daily concertation procedure between CBs within and outside the European System of Central Banks, which normally takes place at 2:15 p.m. Central European Time. On July 1, 2016, the ECB changed the publication time of the euro foreign exchange reference rates (ECB reference rates) from around 2.30 p.m. Central European Time to around 4.00 p.m. Central European Time. The reference rate against the euro is the average of the buying and selling rates. The publication regime aims to reinforce the distinction between exchange rate fixings used as benchmarks for transaction purposes and the ECB reference rates that are published for information purposes only.

Other monetary framework Yes. To maintain price stability is the primary objective of the Eurosystem and of the single monetary policy for which it is responsible. This is stated in the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, Article 127(1). “Without prejudice to the objective of price stability,” the Eurosystem will also “support the general economic policies in the Community with a view to contributing to the achievement of the objectives of the Community.” These include a “high level of employment” and “sustainable and non-inflationary growth.” Price stability is defined as an inflation rate below but close to 2% over the medium term.

For the Bank of Estonia (BOE), the price stability as the primary objective is set down by the BOE Act, Section 2(1).

Under the framework of existing agreements on mutual administrative assistance, information obtained under the EU regulation may also be communicated to a third country in compliance with relevant national and EU provisions on the transfer of personal data to third countries. The EU regulation does not apply to physical cross-border transportation from one EU member country to another (that is, intra-EU transportation). In the event of suspicion of money laundering or terrorism financing, the FIU may issue an instruction to suspend transactions for up to 30 days after the percept is issued and impose restrictions on disposal of the proceeds of an account or other property constituting the object of the transaction, professional operation, or professional service or other suspect assets or property (MLTFPA, Section 57(1)). Within the term specified in this section of the MLTFPA, transactions may take place or restriction of disposal of an account or other property may... be waived only with written consent of the FIU. During the restriction period, the credit institution or financial institution may not execute any account debit requests by the account holder. In addition to the provisions of this section of the MLTFPA, the FIU may, on the basis of an instruction, restrict the use of property for up to 60 days if (1) during verification of the origin of the property there is suspicion of money laundering and the owner or possessor of the property fails to submit evidence certifying a legal origin of the property to the FIU within 30 days of the suspension of the transaction or as of the imposition of restrictions; or (2) the property is suspected to be used for terrorism financing. The Tax and Customs Board may block accounts used to enable illegal gambling through issuance of an order to the relevant bank instructing it to block the account and freeze the assets. The Tax and Customs Board specifies a period during which anyone who has transferred funds to this account may apply for a refund. The application must be accompanied by evidence (proof of transaction). After investigation, but no more than 30 days later, the Tax and Customs Board decides whether the application is substantiated and the refund should be granted. Seizure of any assets held in an account with a credit or financial institution means imposition of such restrictions on the use of the account during which the credit institution or financial institution does not comply with any account debiting instructions to the extent of the assets seized.

The International Sanctions Act (ISA) regulates the internal imposition, implementation, and supervision of international sanctions of the UN, EU, other international organizations, and the Estonian government. It imposes obligations, including to block accounts and notify the FIU of possible international financial sanctions.

Exchange Measures

The IMF staff report for the 2018 Article IV Consultation with Ethiopia states that, as of November 13, 2018, Ethiopia maintained four restrictions on payments and transfers for current international transactions, which relate to: (1) the tax certification requirement for repatriation of dividend and other investment income; (2) restrictions on repayment of legal external loans and suppliers of foreign partners credits; (3) the prioritization and rationing of foreign exchange to certain imports of goods and services, debt payments and invisibles, and (4) the requirement to provide a clearance certificate from the National Bank of Ethiopia (NBE) to obtain import permits. These restrictions are inconsistent with Article VIII, Section 2(a), of the IMF’s Articles of Agreement and remain unapproved. In addition, staff is in the process of assessing whether a significant spread between the parallel market cash rate and the official market exchange rate, or any other feature of Ethiopia’s exchange system, may give rise to a MCP. Accordingly, the de facto exchange rate arrangement was reclassified to crawl-like from stabilized, effective July 27, 2018. The NBE publishes the exchange rates and the amount traded in the interbank market on its periodical publications. The NBE sold US$50,000 daily to commercial banks in the foreign exchange interbank market to stabilize the exchange rate.

Official exchange rate Yes. The official exchange rate of the birr against the US dollar is determined in the interbank foreign exchange market as the weighted average exchange rate. The official exchange rate applies to all transactions, including purchases from exporters, remittances, and purchases by commercial banks. The rate of change in the official exchange rate has been constant, except during periods of ad hoc adjustment.

Monetary aggregate target Yes. The objectives of monetary policy are to maintain price and exchange rate stability, and support economic growth. Foreign exchange market

Yes.

The foreign exchange rate for commercial banks is the NBE interbank indicative buying rate of the day. The margin between the buying and selling rates may not exceed 2% of the NBE interbank indicative buying rate of the day. Commercial banks must be licensed by the NBE to open a foreign exchange bureau. These bureaus may make legitimate payments for business and holiday travel, education, medical expenses abroad, etc. The NBE sells foreign exchange to commercial banks but not directly to foreign exchange bureaus. As of October 4, 2018, there were 1,875 foreign exchange bureaus. The NBE charges a fee of 1.5% on foreign exchange transactions.

Spot exchange market

Yes.
The NBE supplies foreign exchange to finance priority sector projects through public banks based on estimates at the beginning of each fiscal year.

In the allocation of foreign currency, the NBE identifies the categories of priority or essential import goods as listed: the first priority import goods are categories as fuel and pharmaceutical. Second priorities goods are input for agriculture and input for manufacturing. And the third priority import goods are motor oil, lubricant, liquefied petroleum gas agricultural input and machines, pharmaceutical product, procurement machinery for manufacturing industry, etc.

All NBE-licensed commercial banks may participate in the market. Currently, 17 banks are licensed but only 12 are active. The NBE does not propose its own quotes to market participants, rather participants other than the NBE quote their buying and selling rates. The NBE sold US$50,000 daily to the interbank market; all commercial banks participate to buy the allocated foreign currency.

The market operates based on a market-making agreement; eligible participants quote their buying and selling rates on their own behalf.

Commercial banks’ holdings of foreign currency notes are limited to 5% of paid-up capital. The overall open foreign currency position is computed as follows: First, the difference between assets and liabilities in each foreign currency is determined and categorized either as a long or as a short position. Second, open positions in each foreign currency as determined and categorized under the first step are converted to their birr equivalents using the buying rate at the close of business on Friday. Third, the birr equivalents of open positions in each foreign currency obtained under the second step are added up to arriving at the total long and short positions. Fourth, the greater of the total long or short position determined under the third step is divided by the bank’s total capital to obtain the ratio. Last, the ratio obtained under the fourth step is compared with the limit on the overall open foreign currency position.

Official exchange rate

Yes. The external value of the Fiji dollar is officially determined on the basis of a weighted basket of currencies comprising the Australian dollar, Japanese yen, New Zealand dollar, euro, and US dollar. The relative weights are based on three-year moving averages of Fiji’s direction of trade and are reviewed annually. The exchange rate of the Fiji dollar vis-à-vis the US dollar, the intervention currency, is fixed daily by the RBF on the basis of quotes for the US dollar and other currencies in the basket. The spread is 5 basis points (bps) on either side of the midrate. The official exchange rate is used for accounting and valuation purposes.

Monetary policy framework

Exchange rate anchor

U.S. dollar

The main policy instrument is the overnight policy rate. Its target corridor comprises a 50-bps band around the overnight rate with the repurchase rate at the upper bound and the deposit rate at the lower bound.

Yes. The exchange rate arrangement of the euro area is free floating. Finland participates in a currency union (EMU) with 18 other members of the EU and has no separate legal tender. The euro, the common currency, floats freely and independently against other currencies. The ECB publishes information regarding its interventions; it last intervened in March 2011. When it intervenes, the ECB intervenes at the quotes of the market makers.

Yes. Euro foreign exchange reference rates are based on a regular daily concertation procedure between CBs across Europe and worldwide, which normally takes place at 2:15 p.m. Central European Time. On July 1, 2016, the ECB changed the publication time of the euro foreign exchange reference rates (ECB reference rates) from around 2.30 p.m. Central European Time to around 4.00 p.m. Central European Time. The reference rate against the euro is the average of the buying and selling rates. The publication regime aims to reinforce the distinction between exchange rate fixings used as benchmarks for transaction purposes and the ECB reference rates that are published for information purposes only.

To maintain price stability is the primary objective of the Eurosystem and of the single monetary policy for which it is responsible. This is stated in the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, Article 127(1). “Without prejudice to the objective of price stability,” the Eurosystem will also “support the general economic policies in the Community with a view to contributing to the achievement of the objectives of the Community.” These include a “high level of employment” and “sustainable and non-inflationary growth.” Price stability is defined as an inflation rate below but close to 2%.

In accordance with Regulation (EC) No. 1889/2005, cash controls have been implemented based on a mandatory declaration system for amounts of cash entering or leaving the EU with a value of €10,000 or more. Travelers entering or leaving the EU and carrying more than €10,000 are required to make a declaration to the relevant authorities of the member country through which they enter or leave the EU. The authorities must keep a record of such information and report it to their national financial intelligence unit. The obligation to declare is not fulfilled if the traveler makes no declaration or if the information provided is incorrect or incomplete. In order to check compliance with the regulation, the national authorities have the right to search natural persons, their baggage, and their means of transportation. In the event of failure to comply with the declaration obligation, cash may be confiscated. The EU regulation requires member countries to impose penalties for failure to comply with the declaration obligation. If there are indications that cash is related to illegal activity, authorities of one member country may exchange information with authorities in other member countries. Under the framework of existing agreements on mutual administrative assistance, information obtained under the EU regulation may also be communicated to a third country in compliance with relevant national and EU provisions on the transfer of personal data to third countries. The EU regulation does not apply to physical cross-border transportation from one EU member country to another (that is, intra-EU transportation). Such transportation is not considered “cross-border” for the purposes of the EU regulation; the EU regulation only harmonizes the system for the EU’s external borders.

To conduct money transfer activities, companies must either obtain a license to operate as a credit, electronic money, or payment institution or be an agent of an authorized credit, electronic money, or payment institution. The ACPR is in charge of on-site and off-site control of currency exchange offices’ compliance with the Anti-Money Laundering/Combating the Financing of Terrorism regulations. | Payments arrears | No. |
In accordance with EU Regulation No. 1889/2005, cash controls have been implemented based on a mandatory declaration system for amounts of cash (domestic or foreign currency) entering or leaving the EU with a value of €10,000 or more. Travelers entering or leaving the EU and carrying more than €10,000 are required to make a declaration to the relevant authorities of the member country through which they enter or leave the EU. The authorities must keep a record of such information and report it to their national financial intelligence unit. The obligation to declare is not fulfilled if the traveler makes no declaration or if the information provided is incorrect or incomplete. To check compliance with the regulation, the national authorities have the right to search natural persons, their baggage, and their means of transportation. In the event of failure to comply with the declaration obligation, cash may be confiscated. The EU regulation requires member countries to impose penalties for failure to comply with the declaration obligation. If there are indications that cash is related to illegal activity, authorities of one member country may exchange information with authorities in other member countries. Under the framework of existing agreements on mutual administrative assistance, information obtained under the EU regulation may also be communicated to a third country in compliance with relevant national and EU provisions on the transfer of personal data to third countries. The EU regulation does not apply to physical cross-border transportation from one EU country to another (that is, intra-EU transportation). Such transportation is not considered “cross-border” for the purposes of the EU regulation; the EU regulation only harmonizes the system for the EU’s external borders.

Pursuant to European Directive No. 2013/36/EU and Regulation (EU) No. 575/2013, if the sum of an institution’s overall net foreign-exchange position and net gold position, calculated as set out in Article 352, including for any foreign exchange and gold positions for which own funds requirements are calculated using an internal model, exceeds 2% of its total own funds, the institution must calculate an own funds requirement for foreign exchange risk. This requirement is the sum of its overall net foreign-exchange position and net gold position in the reporting currency, multiplied by 8% (Article 351 of the above-mentioned regulation).

Institutions’ own funds requirements against positions in relevant closely correlated currencies may be lower. Two currencies are deemed closely correlated if the likelihood of a loss—based on daily exchange rate data for the preceding three or five years—of 4% or less of the value of the matched position in question (in terms of the reporting currency) on equal and opposite positions in such currencies over the following 10 working days has a probability of at least 99% for a three-year observation period and of 95% for a five-year observation period. The own funds requirement on the matched position in two closely correlated currencies is 4% of the value of the matched position (Article 354 of the above-mentioned regulation).

Insurance companies in the EU must cover their technical reserves with assets expressed in the same currency. In accordance with EU regulations, the French regulation requires insurance entities to cover their technical reserves with “congruent” assets. As a derogation, a maximum percentage of the technical reserves may be covered by “noncongruent” assets—that is, 20% for life insurance and non-life insurance (Insurance Code Articles R.332-1 and R.332-1-1).

Insurance companies in the EU are required to cover their technical reserves with assets expressed in the same currency (rule of congruence). As a derogation, a maximum percentage of the technical reserves may be covered by noncongruent assets—that is, 30% for the technical reserves specifically relating to occupational pension commitments (Insurance Code Article R.332-61).

For investment firms, pursuant to European Directive No. 2013/36/EU and Regulation (EU) No. 575/2013, the institution must separately sum all its net long positions and net short positions in accordance with Article 327. The sum of the absolute values of the two figures is its overall gross position. The institution must calculate, separately for each market, the difference between the sum of the net long and net short positions. The sum of the absolute values of those differences is its overall net position (Article 341 of the above-mentioned regulation).

For collective investment funds, purchases of securities issued by nonresidents are subject to the same limits as securities issued by residents, namely (1) diversification ratios (5/10/40—that is, no more than 10% of the fund’s assets may be invested in transferable securities or money market instruments of the same issuer, and none...

The exchange rate is fixed by Article 12 of the MCA of November 23, 1972, between the BEAC and France, which states that the par value may be modified following consultation among the signatory countries (BEAC members and France), taking into account the demands of the economic and financial situation of the member countries. Exchange transactions in euros between the BEAC and commercial banks are made at this rate. Buying and selling rates for certain other foreign currencies are also listed officially based on the fixed rate for the euro and the rates for these foreign currencies prevailing in the Paris foreign exchange market. The BEAC’s OTC exchange transactions are conducted exclusively with national public accountants and treasuries. Within the limits of available stocks, the BEAC’s OTC exchange transactions are conducted exclusively with national public accountants and treasuries.

There are no restrictions on interbank foreign exchange transactions within the CEMAC. Exchange transactions are OTC transactions. The BEAC does not intervene in exchange transactions within the CEMAC. These transactions are freely conducted by operators licensed by the MOF with the approval of the Central African Banking Commission (COBAC). A fee of no more than 4% for CFA franc area notes and 10% for other currencies, not including the TCA and any other specific tax, is collected by licensed intermediaries on transactions in foreign banknotes and traveler’s checks. This fee covers all charges on OTC transactions and the intermediation margin. Nine banks are licensed, and all participate in the interbank market.

Foreign exchange transactions are conducted on an OTC basis.

There is no forward foreign exchange market in the CEMAC. However, licensed intermediaries may enter into forward exchange contracts up to a limit of CAF 100 million on presentation of supporting documentation (invoices, debt repayment schedules, or other foreign-currency-denominated debt instruments) and must report such activities to the BEAC. For amounts over CAF 100 million, requests for forward exchange contracts must be made to the BEAC so that their purpose may be verified.

Within the CEMAC, the CFA franc is used freely for payments and receipts relating to current and capital transactions and payments. Settlements with all countries other than CEMAC members must be made through correspondent banks in one of the currencies of the two parties or in any other currency agreed on by the two parties to the transaction.
The monetary unit is the CFA franc, which is the sole official currency and legal tender in all CEMAC member countries. Consequently, transactions among residents must be settled in domestic currency.

An operations account links all the countries with the French Treasury. All purchases and sales of foreign currencies and euros in exchange for CFA francs are ultimately settled by a debit or credit to the operations account. Governments may maintain foreign currency deposits related to oil reserves at commercial banks and use them to meet their external debt service obligations. Exchange regulations in the CEMAC member countries are harmonized.

Administration of the foreign exchange regulations is the responsibility of the MOFs of the CEMAC countries, which may delegate all or a portion of their authority to the BEAC, the COBAC, and licensed intermediaries. For example, authority is delegated to licensed intermediaries to carry out transactions with the rest of the world. They must verify the validity of transactions, collect statistics, and report these activities to the monetary authorities. However, certain types of transactions may not be delegated. The BEAC supervises the exchange regulations; evaluates foreign exchange hedging operations; reviews requests for approval of opening of foreign exchange accounts by resident legal entities; and monitors the repatriation of export proceeds. The COBAC ensures that licensed intermediaries comply with certain provisions of these regulations, especially to prevent weakening of the CEMAC banking system.

Licensed intermediaries may freely execute their customers’ payment orders. The related transfers may, at their request, be made through the BEAC. In this context, the MCA with France serves to guarantee the convertibility of the CFA franc. No payment arrears are allowed on the grounds that insufficient foreign exchange is available.

CEMAC residents are free to hold, purchase, and sell gold in any form within the CEMAC. Except in the case of manufactured articles containing small quantities of gold, CEMAC gold imports and exports are subject to approval by the appropriate authorities. The national treasuries and the BEAC are exempt from this requirement.

Residents and nonresidents traveling from one country to another banknotes within the CEMAC may take with them an unlimited amount of CEMAC banknotes and coins.

If they made no declaration on entry or if they are carrying sums exceeding those they brought into the CEMAC, they must explain the source of the amount in excess of CFAF 1 million. The principle underlying the Central African Monetary Union is the centralization of reserves at the BEAC. ### Capital Transactions

| Controls on capital transactions | Yes. | Capital flows within the CEMAC are not subject to exchange controls. There are no restrictions on most capital flows between CEMAC and non-CEMAC countries, provided they comply with the laws and regulations prohibiting drug financing and trafficking. Certain loans, direct investments, and the issuance, advertisement, and sale of foreign securities within the CEMAC are subject to administrative controls and require approval from the appropriate authorities. Controls on these transactions are applied to countries in the CFA franc area, other than CEMAC member countries, and to all non-CFA franc area countries. Moreover, Article 61 of the General Regulations of the Central African Financial Market Supervisory Commission (COSUMAF), from January 15, 2009, specifies that “when a nonresident legal entity plans a public offering on the Central African regional financial market, it must prepare a disclosure document and submit it to COSUMAF for approval prior to dissemination. The prior approval of the exchange control authority in the various countries concerned must also be obtained.” The article also states that “the issuer must appoint a correspondent (securities dealer) established in a CEMAC member state, where it elects domicile. This correspondent must be responsible for: (1) receiving correspondence from COSUMAF and (2) forwarding to COSUMAF all documents and information required under the laws and regulations or requested by COSUMAF.” |
| Repatriation requirements     | Yes. | In the context of the centralization of foreign exchange reserves, foreign currency collected from capital transactions must be repatriated. There is no deadline to repatriate proceeds from capital transactions. |

| Controls on capital and money market instruments | Yes. | The issuance, advertisement, and sale of foreign securities (shares and bonds issued by foreign enterprises) whose value exceeds CFAF 10 million are subject to MOF approval. Under CEMAC exchange regulations, transactions in capital market securities are treated in the... | same way as simple borrowing and lending operations, as opposed to direct investments, when the shares or equity held by the individual or legal entity represent less than 10% of the enterprise’s total equity.
Borrowing and lending are not regulated by type of instrument or maturity.

The de jure exchange rate arrangement is free floating. The exchange rate is determined in the foreign exchange market. The Gambia participates in the W-ERM II of the WAMZ, which requires that the spot exchange rate between the dalasi and the US dollar be maintained within ±15% of the central rate; however, the authorities have not yet implemented these measures. The Central Bank of The Gambia (CBG) periodically intervenes in the foreign exchange market by selling and buying foreign exchange to augment international reserves and ensure market orderliness.

The de facto exchange rate arrangement is classified as other managed. The CBG does not publish intervention data, but informs market makers on the results of each auction.

The daily interbank exchange rates are computed after the close of each business day. The CBG collects actual buying and selling rates of all participants in the foreign exchange market (between banks, microfinance institutions, and foreign exchange bureaus, and their respective customers) for each traded currency and calculates the average midmarket rate. The exchange rate for government transactions is the average of the midmarket interbank rates of the previous week. The CBG conducts a foreign exchange market review session on the last business day of each week with the participation of the commercial banks, microfinance institutions, and foreign exchange bureaus. During this session, the average market rate of the week is announced as the rate to be applied to government transactions and customs valuations the following week.

The CBG’s monetary operational target is reserve money.

The CBG has been authorized to deal with microfinance institutions and foreign exchange bureaus, as stipulated in the Reserve Management Guidelines. CBG auctions (purchase/sale) are conducted by written invitations/solicitation for sealed bids addressed to all banks (only banks can participate) and requesting bids to be submitted in writing. The auction preannounces the foreign exchange amount, currency, bid submission deadline, and the requirement to submit bids in sealed envelopes to the CBG. The most competitive bid, that is, the best rate (lowest buying, highest selling rate), is selected in these auctions. While the cutoff rate is determined by the best bid rate, it is subject to the rate range set by the CBG intervention policy, which limits awarding rates within intervention trading limits of the policy as at trade date. The auctions are sanctioned by the Intervention Committee.</td>

<td>Interbank market</td>
<td>Yes. Commercial banks and foreign exchange bureaus are free to engage in transactions among themselves or with customers at exchange rates agreed on by the parties to these transactions. The daily interbank exchange rate rates are computed after close of each business day. The CBG collates actual buying and selling exchange rates of all participants in the foreign exchange interbank (banks and foreign exchange bureaus) for each traded currency and calculates the average midmarket rate. Hence, the interbank exchange rates only include rates between banks, foreign exchange bureaus, and their respective customers. All 12 commercial banks and license foreign exchange bureaus and microfinance institutions take part in the interbank foreign exchange market.</td>

Floating
Yes. The de jure and de facto exchange rate arrangements of Georgia are floating. The National Bank of Georgia (NBG) intervenes in the foreign exchange market through foreign exchange auctions, but does not make any explicit or implicit commitment with respect to an exchange rate target or path. Considering the market conditions, interventions are aimed at filling international reserves. Net purchases of the NBG totalled US$197.5 million. In 2018, the economic environment in trading partner countries improved substantially, which resulted in an increased demand for Georgian exports and led to significant improvement in current account deficit. Particularly, exports of goods and services (especially, tourism) increased considerably. Moreover, money transfers rose substantially. During the year, the nominal effective exchange rate experienced episodes of both appreciation and depreciation. Overall, in December 2018, the nominal effective exchange rate gained 8% on an annual basis. Meanwhile, the real effective exchange rate appreciated by 3.4% on a year-on-year basis. The amount bought/sold at NBG’s foreign exchange auctions and the average exchange rates are posted on the NBG website the same day, shortly after each auction.

Effective January 31, 2019, the NGB introduced a new instrument – Foreign exchange options. The main goal of using foreign exchange options is filling the international reserves. Foreign exchange option is a financial instrument, which gives the right to a holder (but not obligation) to buy national currency in exchange for foreign exchange (USD or EUR) during the predetermined period at the official exchange rate. The condition of using the options is that the lari exchange rate should be stronger than the average of previous 20 days.

The press release about the foreign exchange interventions is published on the day of the auction and also in the statistics section of the NBG website. Data on the sale of the foreign exchange options are published the same day in the statistics page of the NBG. Tentative calendar for the following months is also available.

Free floating

Official exchange rate Yes.

The official exchange rate for the US dollar is determined daily and may be used (not mandatory) for state budget and tax accounting and for payments between the government and businesses and other legal entities. The official exchange rates for other currencies are based on the cross-rates for the dollar and other currencies in the international market. (1) The calculation period for the official exchange rate of the lari against the US dollar is from 4:30 p.m. of the previous business day to 4:30 p.m. of the calculation day within the Bloomberg trading platform (“trade platform”), taking into account all registered foreign exchange spot trades. The official exchange rate of the lari vis-à-vis the US dollar is calculated as the average weighted exchange rate on the interbank market during the calculation period within the trade platform for registered trades. Trades concluded with the NBG as counterparty are considered interbank trades. (2) The following instances are not considered in the determination of the official exchange rate of the lari vis-à-vis the dollar: (a) trades at rates significantly different from other registered trades: a rate is considered significantly different if it is either 2.5% higher or lower than the average weighted exchange rate of all the other registered trades within the calculation period (in practice, since the introduction of the new system in 2009, there have been only a few cases for excluding outliers); and (b) opposite trades between two counterparties with similar rates and amounts. (3) Trades used in the calculation of the official exchange rate of the lari vis-à-vis the US dollar for the previous day may be used in the calculation of the official exchange rate during the calculation period if (a) the number of registered trades within the trade platform during the calculation period that may be used in the calculation of the official exchange rate is three or fewer than three; or (b) the total amount of the trades within the trade platform during the calculation period that may be used in the calculation of the official exchange rate is less than US$1.5 million. (4) The official exchange rate of the lari vis-à-vis other foreign currencies is determined according to the rate in international markets or the issuer country’s domestic interbank currency market on the basis of cross-currency exchange rates. (5) The list of market segments for foreign currencies (interbank or CB rate) used in the determination of the cross-currency exchange rate is determined by the NBG. (6) The sources for exchange rates are the Reuters and Bloomberg Information systems and CBs’ websites. (7) In the determination of cross-currency exchange rates, the latest available exchange rates are used. (8) Cross-currency exchange rates, the rates of foreign currencies (other than the lari) vis-à-vis the US dollar, are determined by the CB each business day from 2:45 p.m. to 3:00 p.m. In case of technical difficulties, a delay in the determination of exchange rates is permitted until the problems are resolved. Official exchange rate calculation is automated, using in-house software.

Monetary aggregate target

Inflation-targeting framework Yes. In December 2009, the NBG adopted an inflation-targeting framework.

Target setting body Yes. The target inflation is set by the NBG and submitted to the parliament. The Monetary Policy Committee (MPC) decisions are submitted, in the form of recommendations, to the governor of the NBG who will make the final decision. The MPC sets the target inflation and can also decide to set the type of target. The NBG is independent in its decision to set the inflation target and utilize its instruments to conduct the monetary policy.

Government

Central Bank Yes. The MPC consists of 14 NBG staff members and is led by the governor of the NBG. The meetings are held eight times in a year according to a preannounced calendar (but in extraordinary circumstances, unplanned meetings can also be arranged). The MPC is responsible for determining the target rate of inflation and setting monetary policy rate. The committee is also responsible for discussing and making decisions on issues regarding open market operations and other monetary and exchange rate operations, the issuance of certificates of deposit, setting the interest rate on NBG loans, minimum reserve requirement norms, other lending/deposit operations, and monetary policy instruments (except for the lender of Inflation target was set at 3% for 2018 and for 2019–2021, which is also NBG’s long-term target.

The monetary policy of the NBG is forward looking and is based, not on the current level of inflation, but rather, on the forecasted level of inflation and the expectations of economic agents. For this reason, economic conditions are constantly evaluated and inflation forecasts are developed which consider those risks that can influence the price level. Inflation target is expressed in terms of the annual inflation rate.

The consumer price index (CPI) annual inflation is used as the point inflation target for the medium term.

The target horizon is three years.

The monetary policy rate is the one-week refinancing rate.

The interest rate corridor is 2%—symmetric around policy rate ±100 bps (bps, basis points). The corridor is created by using standing facilities: overnight loans and overnight deposits.

Once a year, the NBG presents its annual report to the parliament.

In practice, the deviation of inflation from its target is explained in the Quarterly Monetary Policy Reports.

Press releases on the MPC’s decisions about changes to the main monetary policy (refinancing) rate are immediately published on the NBG website. Press releases include information about the reasons of monetary policy decisions and forward guidance. In addition, deviation of the current inflation from the targeted level is explained.

The NBG publishes quarterly inflation forecasts and forecasted path of the policy rate in the Monetary Policy Reports.
Market participants are allowed to freely determine their bid-ask spreads and foreign exchange commissions in transactions with their clients. All financial institutions may deal in foreign exchange with the public, and no special licenses are required. As of December 31, 2018, there were 15 commercial banks, two nonbank deposit institutions (credit unions), 67 microfinance organizations, and 1018 foreign exchange bureaus. Banks, microfinance organizations, and foreign exchange bureaus may buy and sell foreign currency banknotes. Their potential clients could be individuals and legal entities. Foreign exchange bureaus must be registered and may not enter into foreign exchange transactions directly with the NBG. They may transact only with banknotes. They may maintain accounts abroad on their own behalf, but may not maintain foreign accounts or make transfers on behalf of their clients.

The main goal of foreign exchange auctions is to build international reserves, eliminate the pressure on the exchange rate because of high temporary inflows/outflows of foreign capital, and/or balance a private or government financing gap. The multiple price foreign exchange auction (introduced in 2009) is held occasionally at the discretion of the NBG in US dollars. The NBG defines the type of intervention (sale/purchase), the amount of currency to be sold/purchased, and minimum and/or maximum acceptable exchange rates for bidding. The amount is announced using the Bloomberg system, at least one hour in advance of the auction. Participants may bid within a corridor around the official exchange rate. Corridor is defined by NBG for each auction and it depends on current market condition. There are no limits on bid amounts; each bank may place only one bid. The settlement of currency exchange operations with successful bidders takes place on t + 1—that is, on the first business day following the trade date in Georgia and in the country whose currency was traded. The volume sold/purchased at the auction and the average exchange rates are posted on the NBG website immediately after the auction. In case of default, the NBG applies a fine. In case of a foreign currency sale auction, if a winning bank does not have sufficient funds in its national currency settlement account before the second cutoff of the real-time gross settlement on the auction settlement date, settlement will take place on the following business day. In case of foreign currency purchase auction, if a winning bank is unable to transfer sufficient foreign currency to its foreign currency correspondent account at the NBG before the end of business day of the issuer country of the foreign currency, the bank must pay a surcharge equal to 2% of the nominal value of purchased foreign currency. The value date of this transaction is the same as the foreign exchange auction settlement date. If a bank does not have sufficient funds in its settlement account at the NBG before the second cutoff of the real-time gross settlement on the business day.
following the auction settlement date, the winning bids of the bank are annulled. There is a surcharge on the national currency settlement account of a bank: if a bank does not have sufficient funds in its national currency settlement account, the surcharge is taken from the bank’s US dollar correspondent account and/or another foreign currency correspondent account at the NBG. The surcharge is calculated and charged using the official foreign exchange rates on the day of the transaction. Auction participants are not required to finance specific international transactions. Auctions are conducted in the interbank foreign exchange market in the Bloomberg system. All commercial banks licensed in Georgia may participate in this auction after receiving participating bank status from the NBG at their request.

Effective January 31, 2019, the NBG introduced a new instrument – Foreign exchange options. Foreign exchange options are sold via auctions in exchange for a fee. Foreign exchange option is a financial instrument, which gives the right to a holder (but not obligation) to buy national currency in exchange for foreign exchange (USD or EUR) during the predetermined period at the official exchange rate. The condition of using the options is that the lari exchange rate should be stronger than the average of previous 20 days.

The exchange rate arrangement of the euro area is free floating. Germany participates in a currency union (EMU) with 18 other members of the EU and has no separate legal tender. The euro, the common currency, floats freely and independently against other currencies. The ECB publishes information regarding its interventions; it last intervened in March 2011. When it intervenes, the ECB intervenes at the quotes of the market makers.

Yes. The ECB publishes a reference rate based on the daily concertation procedure between CBs within and outside the European System of Central Banks. The publication time of the euro foreign exchange reference rates is around 14:30 Central European Time to around 16:00 Central European Time. Other monetary framework Yes. To maintain price stability is the primary objective of the Eurosystem and of the single monetary policy for which it is responsible. This is stated in the Treaty on the Functioning of the EU, Article 127(1). “Without prejudice to the objective of price stability,” the Eurosystem will also “support the general economic policies in the Community with a view to contributing to the achievement of the objectives of the Community.” These include a “high level of employment” and “sustainable and non-inflationary growth.” Price stability is commonly defined as inflation rates at levels below, but close to, 2% over the medium term.

Spot exchange market Yes. Conducting banking business and providing financial services require a license from the ECB (see Article 4 (1)(a) Regulation No. 1024/2013). Providing financial services requires a license from the Federal Financial Supervisory Office (Section 32 of the Banking Act). Dealing in foreign notes and coins requires a license because of the risk of money laundering. This refers primarily to exchange bureaus as specialized financial institutions: a license to conduct overall banking business already includes permission to deal in foreign currency. Hotels, travel agencies, and department stores dealing in foreign currency only as a secondary business do not need a license. As of June 30, 2019, about 1,401 deposit-taking credit institutions and 11 financial services institutions (non-microfinance institutions—non-MFIs), and 5 other non-MFIs were permitted to deal in foreign currency.

In accordance with Regulation (EC) No. 1889/2005, cash controls have been implemented based on a mandatory declaration system for amounts of cash entering or leaving the EU with a value of €10,000 or more. Travelers entering or leaving the EU and carrying more than €10,000 are required to make a declaration to the relevant authorities of the member country through which they enter or leave the EU. The authorities must keep a record of such information and report it to their national financial intelligence unit. The obligation to declare is not fulfilled if the traveler makes no declaration or if the information provided is incorrect or incomplete. To check compliance with the regulation, the national authorities have the right to search natural persons, their baggage, and their means of transportation. In the event of failure to comply with the declaration obligation, cash may be confiscated. The EC regulation requires member countries to impose penalties for failure to comply with the declaration obligation. If there are indications that cash is related to money laundering or financing of terrorism, authorities of one member country may exchange information with authorities in other member countries. Under the framework of existing agreements on mutual administrative assistance, information obtained under the EC regulation may also be communicated to a third country in compliance with relevant national and EU provisions on the transfer of personal data to third countries. The EC regulation does not apply to physical cross-border transportation from one EU-member country to another (that is, intra-EU transportation). Such transportation is not considered “cross-border” for the purposes of the EC regulation; the EC regulation only harmonizes the system for the EU’s external borders. According to Section 1(3a) Zollverwaltungsgesetz (German national law) additionally intra-EU cash flows must be monitored. Section 12a Zollverwaltungsgesetz stipulates an obligation to disclose cash verbally on request of the relevant authorities, when travelers enter or leave Germany from or to another EU-member country carrying cash or equivalent means of payment with a value of €10,000 or more. Procedural provisions, for example, regarding violations or possibilities to check compliance, are similar. Pursuant to Article 12 of Council Regulation (EU) No. 2017/1509, it is prohibited to sell, supply, transfer or export, directly or indirectly, newly printed or unissued DPRK-denominated banknotes and minted coinage, to or for the benefit of the Central Bank of DPRK. Pursuant to Article 11 of Council Regulation (EU) No 36/2012, it is prohibited to sell, supply, transfer or export, directly or indirectly, new Syrian-denominated banknotes and coinage, printed or minted in the Union, to the Central Bank of Syria.

Exchange Measures

Restrictions and/or multiple currency practices

Yes.

The IMF staff report for the 2017 Article IV Consultation, Fourth Review under the Extended Credit Facility Arrangement, Request for Waiver for Nonobservance of Performance Criteria, and Request for Extension and Rephasing of the Arrangement with Ghana states that as of August 3, 2017, Ghana maintained one exchange restriction and a MCP subject to IMF approval. The exchange restriction arises from the limitation/prohibition on purchasing and transferring foreign exchange for import transactions by importers who have not submitted to the commercial bank customs entry forms for any past foreign exchange transactions related to imports, and which are unrelated to the underlying transaction. An MCP also arises, because the Bank of Ghana (BOG) requires the use of its internal rate (that is, the previous day’s weighted average interbank exchange rate) for government transactions and the surrender of foreign exchange proceeds from cocoa exports funded through the cocoa syndicated loan without having a mechanism in place to ensure that, at the time of the transaction, this exchange rate does not differ from the rate prevailing in the market rate (that is, the interbank exchange rate) and the rates used by banks in their transactions with their customers by more than 2%. (Country Report No. 17/262)

Yes. The currency of Ghana is the Ghanaian cedi (GHC).

No.

Exchange rate structure

Unitary

Dual

Yes.

The BOG uses a reference rate for certain official transactions. This rate does not involve a mechanism to ensure that it does not differ from the prevailing market rate by more than 2%, thus giving rise to an MCP. The BOG publishes daily reference foreign exchange rates against cedis. The US dollar–cedi reference midrate is the weighted average of all the daily spot foreign exchange market transactions of at least US$10,000 reported by all banks until 2:30 p.m. to the BOG, excluding transactions where BOG was a counterparty. The other currencies’ reference rate to cedis is based on the current cross-rates in the international foreign exchange market from Reuters.

Other managed arrangement

Floating Yes.
The de jure and de facto exchange rate arrangements are floating. The exchange rate of the cedi is determined by market forces. Ghana joined the W-ERM II of the WAMZ, which requires that the spot exchange rate between the cedi and the US dollar be maintained within a margin of ±15% around the central rate. However, the authorities have yet to implement these measures. The BOG does not publish information on its interventions. During 2018, portfolio rebalancing by foreign investors led to the repatriation of coupons and principal from the local bond market. Despite large foreign exchange sales by the BOG, the cedi depreciated by around 9% against the US dollar in 2018, with most of the volatility occurring in H2 2018.

Some factors impacting exchange rate in 2018 included the following:
(1) Impact of Fed interest rate hike
(2) Increased foreign exchange demand from manufacturing, corporate, and energy-related sectors
(3) Coupon repatriation
(4) Concerns about MTN IPO on the cedi
(5) Cocoa syndicated loans.

Free floating

Official exchange rate Yes.
The BOG publishes daily reference foreign exchange rates against the cedi. The US dollar–cedi reference midrate is the weighted average of all the daily spot foreign exchange market transactions of at least US$10,000 reported by all banks until 2:30 p.m. to the BOG excluding, effective January 18, 2019, transactions where BOG was a counterparty. All bank-bank and bigger size (above US$10,000) bank-customer deals concluded and reported are included. The other currencies’ reference rate to the cedi is based on the current cross-rates in the international foreign exchange market from Reuters. The previous day’s reference rate as computed is used for all transactions involving the BOG except market intervention.

Floating
Free floating

Yes.  The exchange rate arrangement of the euro area is free floating. Greece participates in a currency union (EMU) with 18 other members of the EU and has no separate legal tender. The euro, the common currency, floats freely and independently against other currencies. The ECB publishes information regarding its interventions; it last intervened in March 2011. When it intervenes, the ECB intervenes at the quotes of the market makers.

Official exchange rate

Yes.  The ECB publishes a reference rate based on the daily concertation procedure between CBs within and outside the European System of Central Banks, which normally takes place at 2:15 p.m. Central European Time. On July 1, 2016, the ECB changed the publication time of the euro foreign exchange reference rates (ECB reference rates) from around 2.30 p.m. Central European Time to around 4.00 p.m. Central European Time. The reference rate against the euro is the average of the buying and selling rates. These rates are used by the BOG in its foreign currency transactions, subject to transaction limits and predetermined buy/sell spreads.

To maintain price stability is the primary objective of the Eurosystem and of the single monetary policy for which it is responsible. This is stated in the Treaty on the Functioning of the EU, Article 127(1). “Without prejudice to the objective of price stability,” the Eurosystem will also “support the general economic policies in the Community with a view to contributing to the achievement of the objectives of the Community.” These include a “high level of employment” and “sustainable and non-inflationary growth.” Price stability is defined as an inflation rate below but close to 2%.

ADs may freely determine their exchange rates and foreign exchange commissions in transactions with their clients.

Credit institutions are authorized to carry out activities in the spot exchange markets, and they are the major participants in this market, either on their own account or on behalf of their customers. In addition to credit institutions, foreign exchange bureaus are legal entities also authorized to carry out OTC spot activities with any natural person, keeping up with the general and specific money-laundrying legal and regulatory framework. They are supervised by the BOG. The volume of their activities is insignificant. There is no parallel market. The requirements for the establishment and operation of exchange bureaus as sociétés anonymes (public limited companies) other than credit institutions are stipulated in Law No. 2515/1997, BOG Governor’s Act No. 2541/27 of February 2004, as amended by BOG Governor’s Act No. 2641/20 of April 2011. Pursuant to Article 15 of Law No. 2515/1997, as amended, the BOG is responsible for authorizing the establishment, operation, and supervision of exchange bureaus. As of December 31, 2018, there were 11 foreign exchange bureaus authorized to engage in foreign exchange transactions directly with the BOG. They engage in purchasing and selling foreign banknotes and traveler’s checks, money transfer intermediation, promotion of and intermediation in the supply of bank products and services (excluding commitments on behalf of credit institutions and the execution of payments or receipts on behalf of such institutions), advance payments to credit card holders, payment of bills issued by noncredit institutions, and so on. Subject to certain conditions, such companies may cooperate with credit institutions in the transfer of funds that (1) are credited to deposit accounts of the principals or beneficiaries; (2) maintained with the cooperating credit institution, either directly or through deposit accounts maintained by these companies with the cooperating credit institutions; or (3) concern the payment of bills/liabilities of the principals to credit institutions. Some of these conditions do not apply to cooperation with a parent credit institution based in Greece or another EEA country.

Resident Accounts

Foreign exchange accounts permitted  Yes.

Held domestically  Yes. On June 28, 2015, and July 18, 2015, limits were imposed on the use of funds deposited in Greek bank accounts and the opening of accounts in Greek banks. Effective March 1, 2018, the opening of new account as well as the addition of co-holders to an already existing account with a credit institution, irrespective of whether a new customer ID is generated, was permitted. Transfers by individuals abroad are subject to BTAC approval with some exceptions: individuals may transfer the cost of medical treatment and tuition fees for study abroad without limit—€5,000 a quarter for living expenses (€8,000 if transferred directly to the educational institution)—and withdraw in cash or transfer €2,000 for the expenses of the person escorting the person undergoing medical treatment abroad, subject to documentation. Effective July 1, 2018, the acceptance and execution by credit institutions of orders of fund transfers abroad was allowed up to €4,000 a customer ID a calendar two-month period without documentation up to an aggregate monthly ceiling in euro to be determined and allocated among credit institutions by decision of the BTAC. Previously, the limit was increased to €2,000 a calendar two-month period from €1,000 a month, effective March 1, 2018. Depositors may use their deposits to buy domestic financial instruments without limit. Credit and debit cards issued by Greek banks may be used for payments abroad with specific limits granted.
to banks from the BTAC.
The biweekly cash withdrawal limit of €840 a depositor (customer ID) a credit institution was increased to €1,800 a month (from September 1, 2017), to €2,300 a month (effective March 1, 2018), to €5,000 a month (effective June 4, 2018) from any branch or ATM or credit institutions in Greece and abroad. Certain institutions, transactions, and funds transferred from abroad are exempt. There is no limit on cash withdrawals from the amount deposited after July 22, 2016, and the amount of cash that may be withdrawn from amounts transferred from abroad after July 22, 2016, is 30%. Cash withdrawal via credit cards or prepaid cards is prohibited. Shipping companies may withdraw €50,000 a day, and 30% of the funds transferred from abroad following the date of the transfer may also be withdrawn.

Effective October 1, 2018, all restrictions related to domestic cash withdrawals were lifted. This includes credit and prepaid cards too. Cash withdrawals abroad remain at the monthly limit of €5,000 either from a debit, credit, or prepaid card.)

Transfers of funds of businesses (legal persons and entrepreneurs) abroad are subject to approval by the subcommittees of the banks established for that purpose based on documentary evidence and declaration that the documents are original and have not been submitted to another bank for processing. Effective October 1, 2018, transfers of businesses (legal persons and entrepreneurs) abroad exceeding €1,000,000 (previously €700,000 from November 27, 2017) a depositor a day in a bank and transfers for purposes other than imports of goods must be approved by the BTAC. Amounts below this limit may be approved by the bank’s subcommittee, while amounts below, effective October 1, 2018, €100,000 a day (previously €40,000, effective May 31, 2018, and €20,000, from November 27, 2017) can be executed by branches without prior approval by the bank’s subcommittee and do not require fulfillment of so-called past historical data criteria (see below). Daily transfers by depositors (legal persons and entrepreneurs) approved by the bank’s subcommittee are also subject to monthly limits based on the previous years’ monthly imports (48 months). Total monthly transfers approved by the bank’s subcommittee for a depositor (legal persons, entrepreneurs) may not exceed the maximum monthly imports plus 60% of those of the previous 48 months. The past historical data import requirement does not apply to transfers for the acquisition of fixed assets and subscriptions and transfers by businesses established after October 1, 2014. Approvals by the BTAC and the subcommittees for transfers abroad are valid for 12 business days. Banks must prioritize the transfers according to the due date of payment and types of goods imported and to safeguard public and social interest. Banks are subject to weekly limits on the total amount of their transfers abroad on their own behalf and on behalf of their customers. Banks’ payments and transfers abroad for their own liquidity and risk management are exempt from the overall daily/weekly limit allocated to them by the BTAC. Exempt from the limit are the following transfers: (1) individuals’ tuition fee, student living expenses, and medical expenses; and (2) interbank transactions of domestic banks, including with foreign banks—exempt from their overall BTAC limits. The weekly limit on transfers abroad for the banking system was gradually increased from €352 million to €1,060 million.

 Resident insurance companies may transfer abroad periodic payments related to unit-linked investments based on contractual obligations as of June 28, 2015. Capital transfers are subject to BTAC approval. Early termination of deposits, early repayment of loans, and early redemption of time deposits are allowed.

Companies having the form of a legal person and maintaining double-entry accounting records may open a sight or deposit account with a credit institution even if it requires creating a new customer ID. Effective March 1, 2018, the opening of new account as well as the addition of co-holders to an already existing account with a credit institution, irrespective of whether a new customer ID is generated, was permitted. Previously, activation of dormant accounts and opening new sight and deposit accounts was prohibited. Co-holders could not be added to existing accounts unless the person did not have an account in Greece for: (1) payroll payments; (2) payment of contractual obligations in the same bank; (3) payment of newly awarded pension and welfare benefits; (4) clearing of card transactions under new agreements; (5) transactions of new legal persons set up after May 1, 2015; (6) transactions of start-ups; (7) deposits of cash collateral for LCs, documentary credits, or loans by the same bank; (8) for a third party under legal obligation (for receipt of transfers from abroad exceeding €10,000); (9) a time deposit for the account holder; and (10) with BTAC approval. The exemptions were gradually widened.

Effective March 1, 2018, any restrictions on new accounts opening, co-holders adding, or revival of dormant accounts were lifted.

According to Law No. 4364/2016, the distinction between assets that form part of the technical reserves and those that do not was eliminated, and there are no restrictions on the investment of the assets of the insurance companies. However, capital controls affect the investment of the assets of the insurance companies in the same way as other (noninsurance) companies.

Residents are permitted to convert domestic currency deposits held with resident credit institutions to foreign currency deposits.

Effective March 1, 2018, the opening of new account as well as the addition of co-holders to an already existing account with a credit institution, irrespective of whether a new customer ID is generated, was permitted. Previously, activation of dormant accounts, opening new sight and deposit accounts, and addition of co-holders was prohibited, with certain exceptions that were gradually widened. Co-holders could not be added to existing accounts, unless the person did not have an account in Greece for: (1) payroll payments; (2) payment of contractual obligations in the same bank; (3) payment of newly awarded pension and welfare benefits; (4) clearing of card transactions under new agreements; (5) transactions of new legal persons set up after May 1, 2015; (6) transactions of start-ups; (7) depositing of cash collateral for LCs, documentary credits, or loans by the same bank; (8) for a third party under legal obligation (for receipt of transfers from abroad exceeding €10,000); (9) a time deposit for the account holder; and (10) with BTAC approval. The exemptions were gradually widened.

The opening of a bank account entailing the generation of a new customer ID was permitted exclusively for the following transactions, the need for which had to be documented in writing by the competent entity, on condition that the applicant submits a statutory declaration to the effect that no other bank account was available for conducting such transactions:

1. Payroll payments, including the issuance and redemption of labor tickets (“ergosimo” vouchers);
2. Payment by the depositor of obligations to the same credit institution arising from contractual agreements entered into prior to June 28, 2015;
3. Payment of newly awarded pensions or welfare benefits;
4. 6. Transactions of start-ups participating in new entrepreneurship support programs;

8. Opening of an account in favor of a third party, either for the purpose of compliance with an order to enforce a pecuniary claim, under an order for payment, court ruling or other enforceable instrument, or for the purpose of garnishment in the hands of a third party, in favor of the beneficiary of the claim, unless the beneficiary had designated a deposit account by any procedural action;
(9) credit transfer from abroad to a (domestic) account of an amount in euros or foreign currency of no less than the equivalent of €10,000;
(10) the transfer of an employer payroll account from one credit institution to another at which the employer already owned an account, and the opening of employee payroll accounts with the latter credit institution as a result of such transfer. In this case, employees had the right to withdraw cash from only one of the two credit institutions, unless customer IDs preexisted in both credit institutions. Employees had to designate the credit institution from which they would have the right to withdraw cash on the basis of their customer IDs by a statutory declaration. The declaration had to be submitted to both credit institutions;
(11) any other case, subject to prior approval from the BTAC;
(12) the opening of a special-purpose account, from which no withdrawals could be made, for the payment of arrears to social security funds and to the Greek state, as well as the opening of an account by social security funds for the exclusive purpose of collecting social security contributions and other outstanding debts;

Student status had to be demonstrated by a certificate of enrollment on the current academic semester in a higher education institution (university or technological institute), college, center of liberal studies, post-secondary education institute, or vocational or apprentice school. Similarly, the opening of a sight or deposit account was allowed in the case of students who, in the current academic year, participate in Erasmus Exchange Programmes when the existence of an account was a condition for the payment of the relevant tuition fees and provided they did not already own or co-own an account. These students’ participation in such programs had to be demonstrated by a certificate from the relevant school;
(14) the opening of a sight or deposit account in the name of a conscript drafted for military duty after the entry into force hereof, provided there was no other account available in the conscript’s name. (15) the opening of a sight account in the name of and for the purpose of raising funds for specifically identified natural persons suffering from incurable diseases. Opening an account as described in (15) had to be approved by the minister of health and welfare, and the beneficiaries had to be specified;
(16) the opening of an account to raise funds for a general charitable purpose or the implementation of a public benefit project. Opening an account as described in (16) had to be approved by the minister of labor, social security and social solidarity, specifying the owners of the account and regulating all matters concerning the management of such account, subject to the operating framework and restrictions of institutions;
(17) the opening of accounts of any type in favor of ELEGEP/PEKKEPE (Special Account of Agricultural Product Guarantees/Payment and Control Agency for Guidance and Guarantee Community Aid) to be used for depositing transfers from the EU and grants under the Ordinary Budget or the Public Investment Budget;

Insurance and reinsurance companies invest all their assets in accordance with the prudent person principle, as specified in Paragraphs 2, 3, and 4 of this article. With respect to the whole portfolio of assets, insurance and reinsurance companies must invest only in assets and instruments whose risks the investor can properly identify, measure, monitor, manage, control, and report and appropriately take into account in the assessment of its overall solvency needs in accordance with Article 33 Paragraph 1 (a). All assets, in particular those covering the Minimum Capital Requirement and the Solvency Capital Requirement, must be invested in such a manner as to ensure the security, quality, liquidity, and profitability of the portfolio as a whole. In addition, the localization of those assets must be such as to ensure their availability. Assets held to cover the technical provisions must also be invested in a manner appropriate to the nature and duration of the insurance and reinsurance liabilities. Those assets must be invested in the best interest of all policyholders and beneficiaries, taking into account any disclosed policy objective. In the case of a conflict of interest, insurance companies, or the entity that manages their asset portfolio, must ensure that the investment is made in the best interest of policyholders and beneficiaries. Without prejudice to Paragraph 2, with respect to assets held with respect to life insurance contracts where the investment risk is borne by the policyholders, the second, third, and fourth subparagraphs of this paragraph apply. Where the benefits provided by a contract are directly linked to the value of assets in a UCITS as defined in l. 4099/2012 (Government Gazette A 250) or in Directive No. 2009/65/EC, or to the value of assets contained in an internal fund held by the insurance companies, usually divided into units, the technical provisions with respect to those benefits must be represented as closely as possible by those units or, if units are not established, by those assets. Where the benefits provided by a contract are directly linked to a share index or some other reference value other than those referred to in the second subparagraph, the technical provisions with respect to those benefits must be represented as closely as possible either by the units deemed to represent the reference value or, if units are not established, by assets of appropriate security and marketability that correspond as closely as possible with those on which the particular reference value is based. Where the benefits referred to in the second and third subparagraphs include a guarantee of investment performance or some other guaranteed benefit, the assets held to cover the corresponding additional technical provisions are subject to Paragraph 4. Without prejudice to Paragraph 2, with respect to assets other than those covered by Paragraph 3, the second to fifth subparagraphs of this paragraph apply. The use of derivative instruments is possible insofar as they contribute to a reduction of risks or facilitate efficient portfolio management. Investment and assets that are not admitted to trading on a regulated financial market must be kept to prudent levels. Assets must be properly diversified in such a way as to avoid excessive reliance on any particular asset, issuer or group of companies, or geographical area and excessive accumulation of risk in the portfolio as a whole. Investments in assets issued by the same issuer, or by issuers belonging to the same group, must not expose the insurance companies to excessive risk concentration.

According to Article 105 (freedom of investment) of Law No. 4364/2016, insurance and reinsurance companies must invest in accordance with this law without any other restriction, and their investment decisions must not be subject to the prior approval or systematic notification the Supervisory Authority. However, capital...

- Stabilized arrangement: Yes.

The de jure exchange arrangement is floating. In accordance with the Monetary Law and the Currency Convertibility Law, Guatemala has a flexible exchange rate arrangement under which the rate is determined in the foreign exchange market by supply and demand. However, the Bank of Guatemala (BOG) may intervene in the foreign exchange market to limit volatility in the nominal exchange rate, without affecting its trend. The BOG intervenes through foreign exchange auctions based on a transparent rule, which limits daily volatility. The fluctuation band (added to or subtracted from the moving average exchange rate from the past five days) used to determine whether the BOG can participate in the foreign exchange market is 0.80%. The maximum amount of daily currency purchases or sales is US$40.0 million, which served to adjust the amounts.
auctioned to the increased volumes traded on the foreign exchange market. The BOG may also intervene when the nominal exchange rate shows unusual volatility, but this instrument has only been used once (during the international financial crisis).

The BOG continued to intervene on the foreign exchange market to limit nominal exchange rate volatility without affecting its trend. The BOG’s intervention on the foreign exchange market during 2018 led to net foreign exchange purchases of US$750.5 million under the intervention rule and purchases of US$455.9 million under the international reserve accumulation mechanism, placing the BOG’s net intervention at US$1.206.4 billion, equivalent to 2.53% of the total traded on the foreign exchange market (5.59% in 2017). While the international monetary reserve accumulation mechanism has part of foreign exchange policy since 2014, it had not been used until 2018 (during the first five months of the year and between August 17 and October 31). This mechanism was incorporated into monetary policy to reduce the surplus of foreign exchange on the foreign exchange market and to strengthen the country’s external position, when feasible, and specifically to address any challenges that may arise from adverse international economic cycles in which the BOG might be required to use its foreign exchange reserves to dampen excessive exchange rate volatility to prevent the adverse effects of this volatility from being transmitted into economic activity and prices. Intervention data are available on the BOG’s website.

The nominal exchange rate at September 30, 2018, had registered a depreciation of 4.87% year on year, as indicated, in connection with the shift in the fundamentals, that had been on the rise until August 2017. The shift observed in the performance of the exchange rate for the quetzal against the US dollar can primarily be explained by three factors.

The first is associated with the flow of foreign exchange in connection with household remittances, that registered a mitigated growth rate during 2018, unlike the three preceding years. The second factor is the increase in the value of imports beginning in 2017 deriving from the growth in fuel and lubricants as well as other imports as a result of the recovery in international oil prices, that led to lower levels of oil bill savings in 2015 and 2016. The third factor relates to the decrease in the value of exports during 2018 attributable to the decline in the international prices of some key export goods, as well as to a reduced export volume of some products from the extractive industries.

However, during fourth-quarter 2018, the growth rate in household remittances accelerated, closing out the year with a growth rate of 13.4%, outstripping the rates observed throughout most of the year, although, falling short of the previous year’s performance. In addition, the decline observed in international oil prices led to substantially lower levels of growth in fuel and lubricant imports, as against the levels observed during the first nine months of 2018. In general, although these factors did not lead to any change in the fundamentals as indicated, they did impact the foreign exchange market through increased supply and reduced demand for foreign exchange, inducing some exchange rate stability during the latter part of the year.

Because the exchange rate followed a depreciating trend within a 2% band against the US dollar from January 2018 and stabilized since September 2018, the de facto exchange rate arrangement was reclassified twice: (1) to crawl-like from a stabilized arrangement, effective January 17, 2018, and (2) to stabilized from a crawl-like arrangement, effective September 26, 2018.

Official exchange rate Yes. The BOG calculates and publishes the reference exchange rate (TCR), which is equal to the weighted average of the exchange rates corresponding to all the foreign exchange buying and selling operations engaged in by the institutions in the institutional foreign exchange market (IFEM). The TCR is applicable to, among other things, the settlement of tax and other obligations entailing payments to or from the government and its entities and the resolution of administrative and/or legal disputes.

Central Bank Board Yes. The target setting body is the Monetary Board (Junta Monetaria). Since 2005, the implementation of monetary, exchange rate, and credit policies in Guatemala has been based on the explicit inflation-targeting framework, which consists, in general terms, of a monetary policy strategy based on a commitment by the monetary authority and the CB to set an explicit target for inflation, taking into account one or more time frames to reach the said target. Against this background, as a result of the inflation-targeting framework consolidation process, the Monetary Board (Junta Monetaria) set a medium-term inflation target, as of 2013, of 4.0% ±1 percentage point, with the aim of achieving the inflation convergence process to reach the said target by anchoring the inflationary expectations of economic agents. The decisions taken by the Monetary Board are adopted by a majority vote of those members present. In practice, the majority of Monetary Board decisions are taken by consensus (Organic Law of the BOG, Article 21).

CPI Yes. The BOG’s mission is to promote general price stability, measured with year-on-year changes in the consumer price index at the end of each year. The main monetary policy tool is the lead rate, which is determined through the comprehensive analysis of the balance of medium-term inflation risks. According to the 2009–2010 National Survey of Household Income and Expenditure (NSHIE), the consumer price index is defined as the measurement of the weighted average of prices of a basket of consumer goods and services corresponding to the largest items of final consumption expenditure. The base month for this index is December 2010.

Other monetary framework
In accordance with Article 1 of the Free Foreign Exchange Convertibility Law, commercial banks may freely set the exchange rate and commissions for transactions with their customers. Holding and managing deposits and accounts and financial intermediation operations in foreign currency are unrestricted both in domestic banks and in banks abroad. The issuance of credit instruments or securities denominated in foreign currency requires authorization by the Monetary Board. Article 2 of the Free Foreign Exchange Convertibility Law stipulates that the IFEM comprises the BOG, banks, private financial companies, stock exchanges, and foreign exchange bureaus. Currently, there are 17 banking institutions, 13 private financial companies, and 3 foreign exchange bureaus. Article 3 of the Free Foreign Exchange Convertibility Law defines foreign exchange bureaus as nonbank institutions authorized by the Monetary Board to operate in the IFEM. In accordance with the Annex to Resolution No. JM-131-2001, foreign exchange bureaus may buy foreign currency in the form of banknotes, traveler’s checks, bank drafts, electronic fund transfers, postal orders, and in other forms of payment denominated in foreign currency as well as in the form of documents drawn against their own accounts; such transactions are executed at prices freely agreed by the individuals and legal entities concerned.

Pursuant to Article 54 of the Organic Law of the BOG, the Executive Branch, autonomous and decentralized institutions and, in general, government entities and dependencies, unless otherwise specified by law, must conduct their financial transactions in domestic or foreign currencies, both within and outside of the country, through the CB.

The BOG can intervene on the foreign exchange market if the reference exchange rate reaches or exceeds the fluctuation band of ±0.80% around the moving average of the reference exchange rates from the past five business days (Resolution No. JM-113-2017). In such cases, the BOG initiates an auction to buy or sell up to US$8 million in foreign currency. No more than four auctions a day are allowed, and the maximum daily intervention is US$40 million. The BOG may also intervene in the foreign exchange market by buying or selling foreign currency whenever the nominal exchange rate shows unusual volatility. Auction participants are not required to finance specific international transactions. The IFEM is made up of the BOG, other banks, private finance companies, securities exchanges, and foreign exchange bureaus referred to in Article 3 of the Free Foreign Exchange Convertibility Law, as well as any other institutions designated by the Monetary Board. Noncompliance by any of the parties is deemed a serious sanctionable violation by the National Securities Exchange of Guatemala (Bolsa de Valores Nacional de Guatemala, S.A.). The sanction consists in a suspension for eleven to twenty trading days, plus a fine equivalent to 150 “fine units” for each trading day of suspension.
The results of public auctions are disclosed to the public by publication on the website of the BOG and through print mass media.

Currently, there are 34 such institutions. As of December 31, 2018, 17 banks participated in the interbank market. For statistical control purposes, they are required to report all foreign exchange operations to the BOG daily, in a manner established by the Monetary Board. The Superintendency of Banks supervises and inspects the institutions with regard to their foreign exchange operations, and they must comply with all pertinent Monetary Board rules. No limits are set on the spreads between buying and selling prices. The BOG is not directly involved in the exchange rates quoted between market participants. Authorization to operate on this market is granted by the Monetary Board.

In this regard, and in accordance with the provisions of Annex A of the General Treaty on Central American Economic Integration, the common regime for the five countries’ trade in unroasted coffee is subject to import tariffs. Refined and unrefined sugarcane, flavorings and dyes, and other items are subject to import controls. Under the bilateral arrangements concerning Guatemala, trade in roasted coffee between Guatemala and Costa Rica is subject to import duties. Guatemala’s tariff structure exempts certain manufactured products. The tariff on imports of most footwear and textile products is 15%, and rates on tires range from 5% to 15%. In addition, safeguard provisions apply to certain agricultural products, which are subject to tariff rate quotas under WTO rules that allow for tariffs above the maximum rate for imports in excess of quota. Yellow corn is subject to a quota of 200,000 metric tons a year, with a tariff of 0% for imports within quota and 15% in excess of quota. Rice is subject to a quota of 19,000 metric tons a year, with a tariff of 0% for imports within quota and 23.7% in excess of quota. White corn is subject to a quota of 200,000 metric tons a year, with a tariff of 0% for imports within quota and 15% in excess of quota. These quotas are adjusted annually after discussions between the private sector and the government. Within the framework of commitments under the WTO, Guatemala has a consolidated ad valorem tariff ceiling of 40% for agricultural products and 45% for other products (50% for the categories indicated in Chapters 50–64 of the Central American Tariff System); both ceilings are subject to the exceptions mentioned in List No. LXXXVIII. There are also separate bilateral trade agreements with Colombia, the Dominican Republic, Panama, and Taiwan Province of China. Under the CAFTA, among Central American countries, the Dominican Republic, and the United States (CAFTA-DR), which took effect in 2006, import duties are imposed on 6,307 items in 10 categories, among which the following relate to goods traded between Guatemala and the United States: (1) Category B contains products such as chicken breasts, fish, and vegetables that are being phased in over a five-year period and that are not subject to duty. (2) Category C contains 788 items for which duty will be eliminated in 10 equal annual phases, starting January 1 of year 1 of the treaty. (3) Category D contains products such as dairy products, green and decaffeinated coffee, and alcoholic beverages that will be phased in over 15 years, for which the duties are 6%, 9%, and 24%, respectively. (4) Category F contains products such as milk and yogurt, for which duties will remain the same for the first 10 years of the treaty; they will then be reduced in 10 equal annual phases and be...
duty free in year 20 of the treaty. (5) Category N contains products such as rum, precooked sausages, and wheat flour, for which duties will be reduced gradually until they are eliminated in 12 equal annual phases, starting on the date CAFTA-DR went into effect; duties applicable to rum, precooked sausages, and wheat flour are 20.0%, 0%, and 6%, respectively. (6) Category O contains black beans, for which duty will remain at its initial rate throughout the first six years of the treaty; on January 1 of year 7, the duty will be reduced by 8% of the base rate every year thereafter through year 11 of the treaty; on January 1 of year 12, the duty will be reduced further by 15% of the base rate and by an additional 15% of the base rate through year 14 of the treaty, and the goods will be duty free, on January 1 of year 15. (7) In addition, pursuant to the trade agreements, the following quotas are in force for 2016: vegetable oil (palm, sunflower, and soybean oil) 1,050 metric tons, dog and cat food 1,368 metric tons, chicken wings 12 metric tons, rice 96,100 metric tons, tuna 500 metric tons, beef 2,383 metric tons, pork 6,265 metric tons, preserved pig meat 1,035 units, white onions 351 metric tons, chicken leg quarters 9,970 metric tons, black beans 1,006.5, ice cream 261 metric tons, cured hams and bacon 1,035 units, condensed milk 625 metric tons, long-life milk 200,000 liters, powdered milk 1,744.5 metric tons, yellow corn 173,000 metric tons, white corn 24,400 metric tons, Manjar caramel spread 46 metric tons, butter 278 metric tons, cream 115 metric tons, other prepared or canned tomatoes 40 metric tons, potatoes 216 metric tons, cheeses 2,330.3 metric tons, and tomato sauce 143.8 metric tons.

Restrictions and/or multiple currency practices: Yes.

The IMF staff report for the First Review of the Arrangement under the Three-Year Extended Credit Facility, Financing Assurances Review, and Request for Modification and for Waivers of Nonobservance of Performance Criteria states that, as of June 8, 2018, the foreign exchange system gives rise to a MCP because the reference rate can potentially deviate by more than 2% from the commercial banks’ purchase and sales rates on a given day. (Country Report No. 18/234)

Exchange measures imposed for security reasons: No.

In accordance with IMF Executive Board Decision No. 144-(52/51) No.

Other security restrictions: No.

Currency: Yes.

The currency of Guinea is the Guinean franc. Silver commemorative coins are also legal tender.

Other legal tender: No.

Exchange rate structure

Unitary

Dual

Multiple: Yes.

The exchange rate structure is classified as multiple, because the official exchange rate may differ from the market rate by more than 2%. Guinea maintains a MCP as the value of the official rate lags the weighted average commercial bank rate on which it is based by one day.

Stabilized arrangement: Yes.

The de jure exchange rate arrangement is managed floating. Guinea announced its participation in the exchange rate mechanisms (ERM and ERM II) of the WAMZ, which formally limits the fluctuation of... the franc to ±15% around a central rate vis-à-vis the US dollar, but this has yet to be implemented. The BCRG replaced the previous weekly foreign exchange allocation with a biweekly competitive auction, reflecting market demand for foreign currency. The BCRG’s intervention policy is based on a budget of foreign exchange sales. Banks are allowed to negotiate freely foreign exchange sales and purchases with their clients. The BCRG regularly publishes information regarding foreign exchange market interventions. Since July 2017, the Guinean franc has stabilized within a 2% band against the US dollar. Accordingly, the de facto exchange rate arrangement is classified as a stabilized arrangement.

The official or reference exchange rate since July 2012 is calculated as the volume-weighted average of the previous day’s rates applied by the commercial banks with their customers. These rates are determined on the basis of supply and demand. The BCRG adopted a competitive foreign exchange auction. Banks may purchase and sell foreign exchange with their customers at freely negotiated rates. A limit is in place to ensure that one counterparty does not purchase more than 20% of the total allocated amount. The rates of other currencies are calculated on the basis of their previous day’s rate vis-à-vis the SDR, as published by the IMF. The official rate is used by the government in its transactions.

The number of foreign exchange bureaus has fluctuated because of the frequent changes in the legal framework. There are 15 active commercial banks licensed to deal in foreign exchange. The BCRG is the only institution authorized to grant licenses. Foreign exchange bureaus may not enter into foreign exchange transactions directly with the BCRG; their operations are limited to the purchase and sale of banknotes. Exchange bureaus are prohibited from engaging in the following operations: (1) taking deposits on account for their clients; (2) forward buying and selling of foreign currency banknotes or traveler’s checks in exchange for national currency; (3) forward buying and selling of foreign currency banknotes and checks in exchange for other foreign currencies; (4) making money transfers of any amount, either abroad or domestically; (5) importing or exporting banknotes; and (6) extending loans to clients. The BCRG introduced Instruction No. 068/DGCC/DCH/16, which limits transactions conducted through licensed exchange bureaus to retail transactions up to a ceiling of US$100,000 a day.

Operated by the central bank Yes. The BCRG transacts with commercial banks only through biweekly preannounced foreign exchange auctions.

Foreign exchange standing facility No.
Allocation No.
Auction Yes. The BCRG has a biweekly competitive foreign exchange auction system. Banks may purchase and sell foreign exchange with their customers at freely negotiated rates. On the business day preceding the day on which an operation is scheduled, the BCRG communicates the details of the given operation to all eligible participants in two-sided foreign exchange auctions by means of a public announcement, through the press, or by any other means (letter, e-mail). The foreign exchange is allocated to the best bidders at the price they bid, up to a limit of 20% of the auction for a given counterparty. The minimum volume of an offer to purchase or sell foreign exchange is US$50,000. The BCRG reserves the right to cancel an auction session or to reject unrealistic offers. Immediately after an auction session, the participating banks must be notified of the results pertaining to their respective transactions. The aggregated results of an auction session must be published at the same time on the BCRG website. A bank that does not honor its commitments arising from the two-sided foreign exchange auction market must be subject to sanctions provided for in the regulations, in addition to a suspension between one and four auction sessions. In certain exceptional cases, the BCRG may announce in advance that an auction will be a one-sided auction at which the BCRG will be selling US dollars. In these circumstances, no single participant may acquire more than 20% of the amount being sold by the BCRG.

Fixing No.

Interbank market Yes. Fifteen commercial banks licensed by the BCRG trade foreign currency among themselves. Banks can trade with each other through the two-way auction system operated by the BCRG.

Over the counter Yes. These transactions are used for official missions abroad.

The CIMA Code of the CFA franc area member countries does not allow insurance companies to invest abroad.

Sale or issue abroad by residents

No. Residents may sell local corporate securities abroad. If these operations result in foreign control of domestic establishments, foreign investors must declare them to the MOF. The sale of securities to liquidate an investment abroad is subject to declaration to the MOF for statistical purposes. Residents may also issue securities abroad, unless the securities constitute a loan. Issuance of the latter to nonresidents must be made through an authorized bank and must be reported to the MOF for statistical purposes.

On money market instruments

Yes. The regulations governing shares or other securities of a participating nature apply.

Purchase locally by nonresidents

No. These purchases must be declared to the MOF for statistical purposes.

Sale or issue locally by nonresidents

Yes. The issuance of money market instruments and the sale of corporate or foreign securities by nonresidents are subject to RCPSFM authorization. There are no controls on the sale of securities resulting from the divestiture of investment in the form of a transfer between a nonresident and a resident, but such sales are subject to the regulations governing the financial settlement of the operation. Settlement of securities transactions by transfer abroad or by credit to a nonresident account requires an exchange authorization to be submitted to the MOF for approval, accompanied by supporting documentation.

Purchase abroad by residents

Yes. The purchase of foreign securities by residents and the transfer abroad of funds for this purpose are subject to MOF authorization. Authorization is not required for purchases of foreign securities whose issuance or offering for sale in WAEMU countries has been authorized by the RCPSFM. The CIMA Code of the CFA franc area member countries does not allow insurance companies to invest abroad.

Sale or issue abroad by residents

No. Residents of the WAEMU zone may sell local money market instruments abroad. The sale of money market instruments to liquidate an investment abroad is subject to declaration to the MEF for statistical purposes. Residents of the WAEMU zone may also issue money market instruments abroad, unless they constitute a loan.

On collective investment securities

Yes. The regulations governing shares or other securities of a participating nature apply.

Purchase locally by nonresidents

No. These purchases must be declared to the MOF for statistical purposes.

Financial credits

- By residents to nonresidents: Yes. These credits require MOF approval. Outward transfers necessary to service such facilities require an exchange authorization, subject to approval by the BCEAO acting on behalf of the MOF and substantiated by documentation.

- To residents from nonresidents: No. There are no controls on these credits, but they must be reported for statistical purposes to the MOF and the BCEAO when granted and when repaid, except for the following credits: (1) mail overdrafts: CFA franc overdrafts for durations not to exceed the normal mail delivery times; (2) LCs available by acceptance, issued to exporters at the request of the authorized intermediaries’ foreign correspondent banks; and (3) credit provided pursuant to a financial agreement between a WAEMU member country and a foreign government or pursuant to an interbank arrangement approved by the Directorate of External Finance. The necessary funds must be transferred from abroad through an authorized agent. There are no controls on repayment of loans, provided the authorized agent handling the settlement is furnished with documentation attesting to the validity of the transaction. Borrowing abroad is unrestricted.

Guarantees, sureties, and financial backup facilities

- By residents to nonresidents: Yes. The granting of guarantees and sureties is subject to MOF approval. Transfers abroad of funds to service these facilities require the issuance of an exchange authorization, subject to MOF approval, and the submission of supporting documents.

- To residents from nonresidents: No. These facilities may be granted freely, although the funds required for servicing them must be transferred abroad by an authorized bank. If, however, these transactions take place between a resident direct investment company and its parent company located abroad, they are considered to be direct investments and therefore require declaration to the MEF and the BCEAO for statistical purposes.

Controls on direct investment

- Yes. Direct investment implies control of a company or enterprise. Mere participation is not considered direct investment, unless it exceeds 10% of the capital of a company whose shares are quoted on a stock exchange. All investment outside of WAEMU by residents of the WAEMU, including investment through foreign companies under the direct or indirect control of WAEMU residents and investment by foreign branches or subsidiaries of companies established in a WAEMU member country, requires MEF authorization.

Outward direct investment

- Yes. All investment abroad by residents is subject to MOF authorization. At least 75% of such investment must be financed by foreign loans. Authorization is not required for purchases of foreign securities whose issuance or offering for sale in WAEMU countries has been authorized by the RCPSPFM (Conseil Regional de l'Epargne Publique et des Marchés Financiers – CREPMF in French).

Inward direct investment

Controls on liquidation of direct investment

Personal capital transactions between residents and nonresidents must be made through the BCEAO, the postal administration, or an authorized intermediary bank, unless authorization is obtained from the MOF.

These transactions require MOF authorization. The individuals concerned may not engage in such operations as a professional occupation without first being licensed and included on the list of approved financial institutions.

These transactions may be made freely, but must be declared for statistical purposes to the MOF when granted and when repaid.

Inheritances and dowries are generally allowed. Gifts and endowments, however, are subject to MOF and BCEAO authorization. These transactions must be conducted through an authorized intermediary and comply with the relevant anti-money-laundering and terrorism financing provisions.

These transactions do not require authorization but are subject to declaration to the minister of finance and the BCEAO for statistical purposes.

Classification

- Currency board
- Conventional peg
- Stabilized arrangement: Yes. The de jure exchange rate arrangement is floating. The exchange rate of the Guyanese dollar is determined in the foreign exchange market. The Bank of Guyana (BOG) periodically purchases foreign currency from foreign exchange dealers to maintain international reserves at acceptable levels. In accordance with bilateral agreements with the...
CARICOM CBs, the BOG quotes weekly rates for certain CARICOM currencies. Reflecting the stability of the Guyanese dollar against the US dollar as a result of interventions, the de facto exchange rate arrangement is classified as a stabilized arrangement. The CB publishes interventions on a monthly basis on the BOG website – “Statistical Abstract Reports Table 2.16 (a).” This data is published on a one month lag.

  Band/Range
In addition to transactions between ADs and their clients, a significant share of foreign exchange transactions takes place between the BOG and public entities with large export earnings. To reduce segmentation and facilitate price discovery, the authorities recently moved some official transactions to the foreign exchange market. Transactions between foreign exchange dealers and their customers represent a smaller share of the foreign exchange market and include conversion of remittances to people without bank accounts. All commercial banks have cambios; however, not all nonbank financial institutions are cambios. As of December 31, 2018, 12 nonbank financial institutions and 6 commercial banks were licensed to deal in foreign currency. The BOG grants licenses after consultation with the minister of finance. Nonbank foreign exchange dealers may sell specified CARICOM currencies to the CB; their operations are limited to the purchase and sale of banknotes and traveler’s checks. These institutions may have accounts abroad. There is a cap on the bid-ask spread of G$1.50 for wires and G$3.00 for cash. This is applicable to all transactions conducted by both the bank and nonbank cambios with their customers.
Foreign exchange standing facility Yes. The BOG conducts its transactions on the basis of the foreign exchange rate obtained by periodically averaging quotes from the three largest dealers. In response to heightened pressure resulting from seasonal factors, the BOG on occasion intervenes in the foreign exchange market.

Allocation Yes. The BOG exercises discretion with regard to its purchases of foreign exchange from exports of sugar and gold by the Guyana Sugar Corporation (GuySuCo, the government-owned sugar company) and the Gold Board and uses a “hard currency budget” for official transactions.

Auction No.
Fixing No.

Interbank market Yes. Banks may trade with each other freely. There are six commercial banks, but the interbank market has not been very active. Direct BOG intervention in the market is rare. The BOG occasionally processes requests from commercial banks for the sale of foreign currency at the average market rate. Interbank trades are infrequent and the volume is insignificant. Six banks participate when necessary. The market does not operate on a commission basis nor does the cap on the bid-ask spread apply to interbank transactions.

Over the counter Yes. Interbank transactions take place over the counter.
Brokerage No.
Market making No.
Forward exchange market No.

Official cover of forward operations No.

Official exchange rate  Yes. The reference rate is officially used by banks to convert US dollar amounts to gourdes on their books and in their financial statements and other reports. The CB does this to prevent banks from using different rates for the same date. As a result, financial and nonfinancial institutions have used this rate for their exchange transactions. The reference rate is published on the BRH website.

Policy rate
Although base money is an indicative target for monetary policy, the CB looks at exchange rate movements (given the high pass-through to inflation), liquidity conditions, and growth.

The Haitian foreign exchange market is divided into a formal and an informal sector. According to an estimate by the CB, the global volume of transactions is divided up as follows: 60% is traded in the formal sector and 40% in the informal sector. Thus, the average rate used in the banking system and the average rate in the informal market are weighted by their sector weights to calculate the reference rate. ADs are allowed to determine freely their bid-ask spread and foreign exchange commissions with their clients.

The BRH operates a US dollar clearinghouse mainly for checks drawn on local banks. Commercial banks quote buying and selling rates for certain other currencies based on the buying and selling rates of the US dollar for those currencies in exchange markets abroad. The market is dominated by banks, followed by money changers. According to the monetary authorities, all banks and certain nonbank financial institutions may conduct foreign exchange transactions. Foreign exchange bureaus must obtain licenses, following a process coordinated by the Ministry of Commerce and Industry (MCI), CB, and the Ministry of Economy and Finance. Authorized foreign exchange bureaus may conduct foreign exchange transactions directly with the CB. These bureaus may not hold accounts abroad and may not make foreign currency payments or transfers on behalf of their clients.

The CB buys and sells foreign exchange. Interventions are made in an effort to contain exchange rate fluctuations, to supply the market and build up reserves.

The CB does not allocate foreign exchange to finance-specific transactions.
Interbank market | Yes.
--- | ---
Banks trade among themselves on a small scale; the interbank market is not well developed. The CB may intervene directly with banks. In case of sales of foreign currency, the CB proposes its own quotes, and there are limits on the bid-ask spreads. For procurement operations, however, the CB negotiates the quotes with banks. The CB does not intervene via market makers. The CB has issued licenses to eight commercial banks, all of which are active in the foreign exchange market.
